Preface

This work examines in detail the length of baseball games at all levels, in all countries, and all eras. If a game lasted 20 or more innings, or five or more hours, or ended after 1 A.M., you will find it here. This effort represents 46 years of work, begun in 1963. I am very thankful for the tremendous assistance along the way by fellow baseball researchers, many of whom are members of the Society for American Baseball Research (SABR).

Those most helpful have included David Black, Patrick Gallagher, Karl Knickrehm, Tim Copeland, Richard Musterer, John Thorn, Miles Wolff, Lloyd Johnson, Tom Kayser, Branch Rickey, Miwako Atarashi, David Skinner, Yuyo Ruiz, Yogo Suzuki, Jon Clark, Tito Rondon, Mike Welsh, Paul Wendt, Eddie Almada, Cuqui Cordova, Jorge Colon Delgado, Eric Dickey, Carlos Fragoso, Kit Krieger, Kensuke Okutani, Charlie O'Reilly, Doug Raynie, Ken Tazawa, Tim Hayburn, Joanne Hulbert, Maseru Ikei, Marty Kuehnert, Brian Larson, Angus Macfarlane, Alexandre Nita, Tom Perry, Stephan Reifenberg, Bill Selnes, Kevin Seldana, Hidehiro Shinkoi, Wayne Subica, Alain Useureau, Beto Villa, Matt Wall, Bill Young, and Chunwei Yu.

Following the Preface is a list of the 69 "triple crown" games, so-called because they meet all three minimum criteria for marathon games: they lasted 20 innings or longer, they took five hours or more, and they finished after 1 A.M. In the chapters that follow, each of the triple-crown components receives similarly comprehensive coverage. Chapter One analyzes games lasting 20 or more innings; Chapter Two, games lasting five or more hours; and Chapter Three, games ending after 1:00 A.M. local time.

My interest in marathon games stems from baseball experience I had on August 9, 1963. On that day my father and I attended a 26-inning two-night doubleheader at Forbes Field in Pittsburgh. After a long rain delay, the first game went 15 innings. Roberto Clemente's RBI single ended the second game in the bottom of the 11th at 2:30 A.M. The next day, we discovered that nobody at KDKA Radio or any Pittsburgh newspaper could answer the question, "Is that the longest-ever night of baseball?"

To my knowledge, nobody has ever before explored such questions as: What is the probability a game will go 10 innings, or 20 innings, or 30 innings, or 40 innings, or x number of innings? How often might we expect a marathon game of 20 or more innings? Of 40 or more innings? What is the probability the 26-inning major league record will be broken this year? What is the probability the 33-inning minor league record will be broken in the next ten years? What is the probability the 45-inning "other" category (which includes any number of kinds of amateur contests) record will be broken in the next 75 years?

How long a wait would give us a 50 percent chance to see the 26-inning major league record broken, or a 95 percent chance to see the 33-inning minor league record broken, or a 99 percent chance to see the 45-inning "other" category record broken? Which is rarer, the 26-inning major league record, the 33-inning minor league record, or the 45-inning "other" category record? As you read further, we will answer all these questions.

Research Methodology: In All Nations and at All Levels

One of my research goals is to treat all levels of play and all countries equally. Most baseball research has unfortunately failed to consider the various levels and countries in which the game is played, focusing almost entirely on major league baseball in the United States.

If you ask baseball historians who hit the most triples in a season, they will reply Chief Wilson of the Pirates, with 36 triples in 1912, because they automatically assume you are asking about the major leagues. However, when it comes to all of baseball, including Negro Leagues, minor leagues, high schools, colleges, American Legion, Babe Ruth League, town ball, Cuba, Japan, Italy, and all other nations, I would guess no one has ever even asked the question, much less answered it.

I believe we should ask and answer such questions. It is hoped that my research is one small contribution towards taking a global approach to baseball research, in which all levels of competition and all nations of the world are given equal treatment.

Joe DiMaggio's 56-Game Hitting Streak

There are important — and, admittedly, surprising — parallels between this research on the probability that marathon games will occur and published research concerning the probability that a batter will ever break Joe DiMaggio's 1941 56-game major league or Joe Wilhoit's 1919 69-game minor league (Western League) hitting streaks.

The 56-game major league streak is considered the prime example of a baseball event that defies the laws of probability. The late Stephen Jay Gould once wrote that DiMaggio's streak is the "most extraordinary thing that has ever happened in sports." These parallels should be further explored in the future.

I have been very fortunate to experience many fantastic and fun times while conducting research on baseball marathons at every major league park, a little over half the existing minor league fields, and many overseas diamonds in Latin America, Europe, Africa, Asia, and Australia.

I especially treasure my "Croix de Candlestick." This may be the most innovative baseball marketing device ever devised by the mind of man. Trapped in Candlestick Park, a frigidly cold ballpark nicknamed the "Cave of the Winds," with shivering fans huddled under blankets amidst swirling foggy mists and blustery arctic winds, manager Dusty Baker brilliantly convinced Giants players their ballpark gave them a unique advantage over visiting teams, and Giants management awarded the "Croix de Candlestick" pin to all fans still shivering in the ballpark at the conclusion of any night extra-inning contest at the 'Stick.

Other great moments included watching the Yakult Swallows play through a monsoon in beautiful ancient Meiji Jingu Stadium in Tokyo, without the slightest thought of a rain delay; freeing a beautiful yellow moth which got stuck in my scorebook down the third base line in Erie, Pennsylvania, at a Sailors game; taking the subway to Yankee Stadium after hearing on the radio at midnight that a rain-delayed game was then only in the fifth inning and getting my picture taken with the scoreboard clock by a visiting group from Raynelle, West Virginia, as the game concluded at 1:23 A.M.; roaming around Fenway Park in the snow in the dead of winter; finding autographed baseballs in the bullpen at Dodger Stadium, also in the middle of winter; getting lost in 12-foot high bushes where Shibe Park used to be, before a church was later built on the site; being imprisoned during a family vacation in an empty Candlestick Park as a teenager after I easily climbed over two fences to get into the outfield but discovered barbed wire preventing me from climbing back over the same two fences to get out again; and having the good fortune to be present when the St. Paul Saints, trailing with two outs in the bottom of the ninth, and down to their last out, scored seven consecutive runs, climaxed by Marc Mirizzi's walk-off grand slam to win the Northern League championship 10–6 over the Schaumburg Flyers September 19, 2004, only the second season-ending walk-off grand slam ever hit in the history of baseball, the first being on September 20, 1999, when Milton Bradley's grand slam for the Harrisburg Senators defeated the Norwich Navigators 12–11 for the Eastern League title.

I hope that this work will contribute to the wealth of baseball knowledge being created by SABRmetricians and baseball historians throughout the world. To all who have helped me, I am very appreciative and grateful.

Longest Games by Innings

I. HIGHLIGHTS, ANALYSIS AND PREDICTING EXTRA INNINGS

Baseball is thankfully free of artificial boundaries of time which confine other sports. This freedom helps to shape the unique magical charm that is an evening at the ballpark. Fans never know whether it will be a two-hour squeaker or whether they may be enchanted until past sunrise by the first-ever wild 12-hour 46-inning slugfest.

In the bottom of the seventh, baseball fans worldwide stand up to sing Albert von Tilzer's music and Jack Norworth's lyrics for the 1908 baseball anthem, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." When games go into extra innings, the song is sung again, with much more meaning, in the bottom of the 14th, bottom of the 21st, bottom of the 28th, etc.:

Take me out to the ball game,
Take me out with the crowd,
Buy me some peanuts and Cracker Jack,
I don't care if I Never get back.

Marathon Extra-Inning Games

In my research since 1963, I have identified 540 baseball marathons lasting 20 or more innings, at all levels of the game, in all nations of the world. These games are hard to discover. Leagues either keep no records, or keep track only of their longest game. The only minor league which keeps exact records of all marathons is the Texas League. If you know of a marathon not listed here, please let me know via e-mail at plowryl176@aol.com.

Rewriting the Record Books

This research has resulted in rewriting four records in three different record books on marathons by innings. Since 1964, the NCAA record for most innings had been recorded as 22 innings. However, this research uncovered a 23-inning game played in Lafayette, Louisiana on March 27, 1971, between McNeese State and Southwestern Louisiana (now called Louisiana-Lafayette). And since 2003, the NCAA record for most innings in a doubleheader had been 29 innings, but the McNeese State-SW Louisiana 23-inning game was the opener of a 30-inning doubleheader.

Since 2005, the NAIA record was also 22 innings, but I discovered a second 22-inning NAIA game played in Arkadelphia, Arkansas April 28, 1970, between Harding and Henderson State.

Since 1976, the National Federation of State High School Associations (NFSHSA) record for most innings in the U.S.A. had been recorded as 28 innings. However, there was never a 28-inning game played; it was actually three games: a 10-inning 2-2 tie, an 11-inning scoreless tie, and a 7-inning 5-2 game. The U.S.A. high school record properly belongs to two 25-inning games, played March 25, 1967, at Honolulu Stadium (aka the Termite Palace) in Hawaii between the Kamehameha Warriors and McKinley Tigers; and April 9 and May 2, 1975, at Farmers Field, Hayward (first 17 innings) and Rebels Field, San Lorenzo (last eight innings) in California between the Hayward Farmers and San Lorenzo Rebels.

Longest Marathon Never Played: 54 Innings in Iowa

The record for longest game has been increasing ever since the first baseball game was played. But the record has unfortunately been cluttered with games that were never played.

At the Delaware County Fairgrounds in Manchester, Iowa on September 25, 1925, or so the story goes as told in the Des Moines Register, the Cascade Reds and Ryan Shamrocks (also referred to in local papers as the Micks and Fighting Irish respectively) town ball teams started a game they never dreamed would last two years! Called on account of darkness after 16 innings with the score knotted at 1, the game continued nine days later on October 4 in Ryan, but was again called due to darkness with the score tied 6-6 after another 15 innings, for a total of 31 innings. It was then scheduled to be continued at Legion Park in Cascade, but was rained out and snowed out respectively the next two weekends. Because of cold weather and snow, it was decided to continue the game the next summer. On July 1, 1926, after a delay of some nine months, the Reds and Shamrocks got together again to finally settle matters in Cascade.

Incredibly, for the third time, the game was called on account of darkness after another 14 innings, for a total of 45 innings, still tied 8–8. Three months later, on September 26, this time back in Ryan, Cascade finally emerged victorious by a score of 9–8 after another 9 innings, for a total of 54 innings. Both pitchers, Heinie Featherstone for Cascade and J.B. “Highball” McAreavey for Ryan, were spitballers. The final totals of 367 days over two years and 54 innings were thought to be incredible all-time baseball records which would never be broken. This great 54-inning Iowa game served as inspiration for the 2,614-inning game in W.P. Kinsella’s novel, The Iowa Baseball Confederacy, probably the greatest baseball novel ever written.

On May 8–9, 1984, the Chicago White Sox hosted the Milwaukee Brewers and set the current AL record of 25 innings. Shortly thereafter, on May 21, sports columnist Maury White recalled the 54-inning game in the Des Moines Register, and wondered what all the fuss was about for a mere 25-inning game in Chicago, when Iowa had hosted a 54-inning game? White partially based his column on Tait Cummins’ “Tait’s Scrapbook” columns in the November 5 and November 12, 1970, Cedar Rapids Witness.

As I attempted to track down elusive microfilm records from local papers in Cascade, Dubuque, and Cedar Rapids, I discovered that, alas, as is so often the case, all is not as it seems! Thanks to SABR member R.J. Lesch of Adel, Iowa, the mystery was unraveled when we obtained original newspaper accounts from the Cascade Pioneer, Dubuque Telegraph-Herald, and Cedar Rapids Gazette.

What we discovered was documentary proof that the supposed 54-inning game was actually four separate games. When Cascade scored twice and Ryan scored once in the first inning played on the supposed second day of the game, the game continued, which proves it was a separate second game. Were it the 17th inning of the earlier 1–1 game called after 16 innings, then the game would have been over at that point, with Cascade winning 3–2 in 17 innings.

Newspaper accounts also proved that the supposed fifth day of the game (the third and fourth days were rainouts) was a separate third game and not a continuation of the second game. Cascade scored a run in the first inning and Ryan did not score, but the game continued, which it could not have done were it the continuation of an earlier game. And lastly, the events of the supposed sixth day of the game were a separate fourth game and not a continuation. Cascade scored a run in the sixth and Ryan did not score, but the game continued.

Although the 1970 Cedar Rapids Witness columns by Tait Cummins had the dates correct, the 1984 Des Moines Register column by Maury White had the dates wrong for three of the four games. The first game was September 4, 1925, not September 25. The second game was September 13, 1925, not October 4. The third game was July 4, 1926, not July 1. The Register did get the date of the fourth game correct: September 26, 1926.

So here’s what really happened. On September 4, 1925, Cascade and Ryan played to a 1–1 tie in 16 innings in Manchester. On September 13, 1925, they played to a 5–5 tie in 15 innings in Ryan, and were then rained out September 27 and snowed out October 4 in Cascade. On July 4, 1926, the two teams played to a 2–2 tie in 14 innings in Cascade. And lastly, on September 26, 1926, Cascade defeated Ryan 1–0 in 9 innings at Ryan. If you add it all up, you do have Cascade scoring 9 and Ryan scoring 8 in a total of 54 innings spread out over 388 days, but it was most definitely four separate games and not one 54-inning game.

On August 22, 1948, a reunion was held at Cascade’s Legion Park for players who had participated in this remarkable “game,” and the oldtimers played a 7-inning game, “for old times sake.” Won by Cascade 18–11, the game was broadcast over the radio, and Tait Cummins was the broadcaster. During the radio broadcast, it was discovered that the first portion of the “game” had actually not been called on account of darkness. Umpire Fritz McPartland of Cedar Rapids admitted he called the game so he could get back home in time to do his farm chores!

Cascade is the birthplace of Urban “Red” Faber, who pitched for the White Sox 1914–33. Built in 1921, Legion Park is still used today for baseball by American Legion Post 528 and Cascade High School. In center field stands Iowa’s very own “Green Monster,” which used to be Cascade’s old drive-in movie screen until 1988, when it was painted green and placed in center field to help batters see the ball better.

So how did generations of baseball historians get misled? Local newspaper accounts clearly indicated that four separate games were played. One misleading headline in the September 17, 1925, Cascade Pioneer stated, “No Decision Reached at End of 31 Innings.” But the text of the story clearly stated there were separate games.

The columns by Tait Cummins in the November 5 and November 12, 1970, Cedar Rapids Witness also clearly indicated there were four separate games. But when Maury White’s column in the May 21, 1984, Des Moines Register mistakenly referred to the four separate games as a “54-inning game,” the seed was planted for the “great myth” of the 54-inning Iowa game.

Longest High School Marathon Never Played: 28 Innings in Indiana

The longest high school marathon “never played” was a supposed “28-inning 6-day long” contest in Highland, Indiana on May 7, two unknown rainout dates, then May 17, 25, and 26, 1976, between the Highland Trojans and Griffith Panthers. For 28 years, from 1976 through 2004, this game was incorrectly listed by the Indiana High School Athletic Association, Indiana High School Baseball Coaches Association, and National Federation of State High School Associations as the longest high school game ever played.

But there was never any final score given, and it was always listed simply as “1976,” with no month and no date. For over a decade, I became increasingly interested in the fact that despite dozens of letters, phone calls, and e-mails to high school coaches and principals in Highland and Griffith, and to sports editors in nearby Gary, Hammond, and Chicago, nobody could tell me either the exact date of the game or the final score.

The only facts discovered during this long decade of unsuccessful research were that neither the Griffith nor Highland high school yearbooks nor school newspapers mentioned the game; the two schools were supposed to play June 5, 1976, according to the Hammond Times, but the June 6 Gary Post-Tribune stated they played other teams on June 5; issues of the June 5 Gary Post-Tribune and June 6 Hammond Times were missing from all microfilm archives; and on November 1, 2003, Highland baseball coach Dan Miller found four former Highland players who played in the game but all they could remember was “the game was real long.”

After I contacted David Zandstra, President of the Highland Historical Society, he finally solved the puzzle by finding a scrapbook owned by Bill Helmer, a former Highland player who played in the game. This scrapbook contains articles from the Lake Suburban Sun Journal and Gary Post-Tribune.

So here’s what really happened. The first three days of the “game” were rainouts. The May 7 game was rained out at Highland’s Hilltop Park, along the Little Calumet River. It was rescheduled, but rained out a second and third time on two unknown dates between May 7 and May 17. On May 17, the fourth day, the game was called due to darkness after 10 innings with the scored tied 2–2.

In both the May 18 Lake Suburban Sun Journal and May 18 Gary Post-Tribune newspaper articles, authors Rich Lindsey of the Sun Journal and Al Hamnik of the Post-Tribune stated neither the Indiana High School Athletic Association nor Lake Suburban Conference had any rules on whether a 10-inning tie game should be continued with play commencing in the top of the 11th, or an entirely new game should be started. Griffith Athletic Director Jim Bartlett stated, “Nothing like this has ever happened before, so we have nothing to go by.”

Between May 18 and May 25, an unknown person decided a new game would be started. However, when on May 25, the fifth day of the supposed “game,” the two teams played a second game to a scoreless tie in 11 innings before 225 fans, the “myth” was created that they had played 21 total innings and were still tied. The next day, May 26, the sixth day of the supposed “28-inning six-day” game, Griffith won the third game 5–2 in 7 innings.

The May 26 box score provides documentary proof that three separate games were played rather than one 28-inning game. Griffith scored twice in the top of the second to take a 2–0 lead. Highland did not score in the bottom of the inning, but the game continued. Had it been the bottom of the 23rd inning rather than the bottom of the 2nd, the game would have been over. The fact the game continued proves there were three games played: a 10-inning 2–2 tie May 17, an 11-inning scoreless tie May 25, and a 7-inning 5–2 Griffith victory May 26.

Here’s another example of how some people could not help but think instinctively of the whole 6-day series of events as one long 28-inning marathon. Jack Moorman of Griffith pitched the entire 10-inning 2–2 game May 17, and also the first 10 innings of the 11-inning scoreless tie May 25. Jack told me that in a locker room team meeting after Griffith won the 7-inning May 26 game 5–2, Griffith head coach Dave Price awarded him two official “saves” for his 20 innings of pitching, although his 20 innings were pitched in two games which officially had nothing to do with the May 26 game.

On August 7, 2004, I sent these facts to the following people responsible for editing the record books: John Gillis, Assistant Director, National Federation of High School Associations; Lance Patterson, Record Update Coordinator, Indiana High School Baseball Coaches Association; and Bill Jones, Executive Director, Indiana High School Athletic Association. On November 15, 2004, Mr. Gillis wrote back to confirm that the error has been corrected for all future editions of the National High School Sports Record Book.

So how did generations of baseball historians get misled a second time? Many people, remembering earlier newspaper articles, believed the game lasted $10 + 11 + 7 = 28$ innings, even though May 27 newspaper accounts of the May 26 game clearly indicated three separate games were played. One such person sent in official notification to those who back then kept records for Indiana high school baseball. Thus began the chain of events which led to Indiana and national high school baseball records being wrong for almost three decades.

Other Marathons Never Played: Knickerbockers and Killer Tomatoes

On July 18, 1951, Harman Nichols wrote a sports column for the Washington Post which discussed a 33– inning game in the Illinois-Indiana-Iowa (3-I) League. The game supposedly took place in 1906 between the Decatur Commodores and Davenport Knickerbockers.

After 17 innings of scoreless ball July 28, 1906, in Davenport, the game was suspended due to darkness and continued August 24 in Decatur with another 16 innings of scoreless ball, resulting in a 33-inning scoreless tie. However, with the help of public library reference librarians in Decatur and Davenport, I discovered that these were clearly referred to in the newspapers of the time as two separate games.

So how did generations of baseball historians get misled a third time? Mr. Nichols' article stated, "And you talk about the longest game on record. You think it was the 26 innings Brooklyn and the Boston Braves played a few years back. It wasn't. The Davenport team in 1906 fought tooth and nail with Decatur July 28 for 17 innings without a score being made. The game was called when the sun disappeared. On August 24, the same two teams picked up where they had left off. Sixteen more innings, and still no score. Again came darkness. One game with 33 innings — and not a run."

Another supposed "28-inning" game which was never actually played occurred in South Dakota July 19 and 26, 1948, between Bonesteel and the Platte Killer Tomatoes. Supposedly, the game was suspended in Platte at 2 A.M. in the early morning hours of July 20 with the score 1-1, and concluded in Bonesteel a week later, with Bonesteel winning 4-3. Winning pitcher Spud Grosshuesch supposedly had 62 strikeouts in the game. During my effort to find the box score, I enlisted the help of Ralph Nachtigal, editor of the Platte Enterprise. After digging out the old 1948 newspaper accounts, we discovered the game did not actually last 28 innings.

On July 19, 1948, the two teams met in Platte, and the game was called after 15 innings, tied 1-1. When the teams met a week later in nearby Bonesteel on July 26, however, they started all over again and played an entirely separate game, which went 13 innings. Bonesteel took an early 3-0 lead. The Killer Tomatoes, back then known as the 5-Milers, scored one in the 8th to cut the lead to 3-1, and two in the 9th to send the game into extra innings. Bonesteel won 4-3 with a run in the bottom of the 13th. Winning pitcher Spud Grosshuesch did pitch all 28 innings for Bonesteel, and he did have 62 strikeouts, but 34 of them were in the first game, and 28 in the second game.

How did generations of baseball historians again get misled, for a fourth time? Just as in the Indiana case, someone confused the facts, and reported to the South Dakota Amateur Baseball Association that Bonesteel had defeated Platte 4-3 in 28 innings.

The fifth longest game never played was a supposed "22-inning" game July 3, 1932, in the Mississippi Valley League. The Keokuk Indians and Burlington Bees "played" to a scoreless tie cited many times in baseball literature on longest games. During my research,

I always wondered how this game could be so similar, in so many ways, to another game also played in Burlington, Iowa 17 years earlier in the Central Association June 27, 1915. In both games, Keokuk visited Burlington, the game was scoreless, it lasted 22 innings, and the time of game was 3:50. The only difference was the date.

Although I wrote dozens of letters over the last decade to sports editors and journalists in Keokuk, Burlington, and Des Moines, I had no answer to the dilemma until Tim Rask of Iowa City solved the puzzle by researching the Burlington Hawk-Eye newspaper archives at the Iowa Historical Library in Iowa City.

How did generations of baseball historians once more get misled, for a fifth time? Hawk-Eye sports editor Ed Dent thought it was very interesting that Larry Brown, a player in the 22-inning 1915 Keokuk at Burlington game was umpiring in the Mississippi Valley League in 1932, which included teams from both Keokuk and Burlington. So Dent ran a copy of the June 29, 1915, Hawk-Eye article about the June 27, 1915, game in his July 3, 1932, edition, with an accompanying article about Brown. What is most interesting is that the date ascribed to the phantom game was July 3 rather than July 2, since the July 3 article should reasonably have been expected to concern a game played the previous day on July 2.

Another marathon never played was a supposed "20-inning" 2-2 tie in just 2 hours 50 minutes in the Cotton States League in Greenville, Mississippi July 11, 1904, between the Greenville Cotton Pickers and Vicksburg Hill Billies. Just as in the case of the Keokuk at Burlington game, baseball literature on longest games makes numerous mentions of this game.

Dave Black, from Highlands Ranch, Colorado, discovered an article in the July 12, 1904, Chicago Daily Tribune which proves this game was called due to darkness after only 19 innings.

How did generations of baseball historians get misled for a sixth time? The mistaken belief the game lasted 20 innings derived from the Daily Tribune's headline writer. Knowing the game had been called as the top of the 20th was about to begin, he wrote the following headline, "Play Twenty Innings to a Tie." Reflective of sports writing in the early 20th Century era, the article concluded, "The game abounded in brilliant ball playing."

Longest Massachusetts Rules Marathon: 172 Innings in Worcester

During the Nineteenth Century, many teams played under Massachusetts Rules requiring the winning team to score a minimum number of runs or "tallies," sometimes 25, sometimes 50, sometimes 65, sometimes 100. Sixteen such games have been identified as having taken 20 or more innings. Massachusetts Rules were established at Dedham, Massachusetts, and the first game played using these rules was the first “marathon” ever played: On May 31, 1858, on the Boston Common, the Holliston Winthrops defeated the Boston Olympics 100–27 in 33 innings.

Games played under Massachusetts Rules established records for numbers of innings which have never been equaled. However, these records must be considered differently than other records, since one inning was defined not by three outs, but rather by one out. Other rules were also different. It was only 60 feet between the bases, and only 35 feet from the plate to the pitcher’s rubber.

One could argue a Massachusetts Rules game of 27 innings was actually a game of only 9 innings, because it only had 27 outs per team. But a baseball historian can’t choose arbitrarily to rewrite history based on data from subsequent times. When a game was played under Massachusetts Rules, and it took 27 innings, it was definitely not a 9-inning game.

On July 28, 1859, in Ashland, Massachusetts, the Medway Unions defeated the Upton Excelsiors 100–78 in 106 innings. The next year, in Worcester, the same two teams played the longest game ever played in the history of baseball, and one of the greatest games of all-time: 172 innings over seven days!

The game was scheduled to begin September 25, 1860. Play continued through September 26, 27, 28; October 1, 4, and 5 until finally it was called a complete game with the score Upton 50 Medway 29. The game took a record 21 hours 50 minutes of actual game time. On its first, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh days, we do not know the attendance, but we know 4000 fans attended on its second day, September 26.

Total elapsed time also set an all-time record of something in excess of 25 hours 0 minutes, with a dinner and rain delay of 20 minutes in the bottom of the 13th September 25, a second rain delay of 2 hours 30 minutes in the bottom of the 13th September 26, a lunch delay of 20 minutes September 27, a third rain delay of unspecified duration in the top of the 173rd October 4, and a fourth and final rain delay, again of unspecified duration, and again in the top of the 173rd on October 5.

The game was suspended for the first time September 25 after 12½ innings with game time at 2:40 and Upton ahead 5–4, suspended for the second time September 26 after 34½ innings with game time at 5:40 and Upton ahead 8–7, suspended for the third time September 27 after 83½ innings with game time at 12:50 and Upton ahead 23–15, suspended for the fourth time September 28 after 136½ innings and game time at 17:20 with Upton ahead 38–25, and then scheduled to resume October 1 in Springfield.

However, it was decided to resume the game instead October 4 back in Worcester. It was suspended for the fifth time October 4 after 172 innings with game time at 21:50 and Upton ahead 50–29. Rain on October 5 prevented the game from ever resuming, and the umpire and both teams finally agreed to call it a complete game, despite the fact the rules required a team to score 100 runs to win and Upton had scored only 50.

Longest Spoof Marathons: Moonlight and the Firefly

During my research, I came across some games that seemed unbelievable, and then I would later discover that they were in fact “spoofs,” or just made-up fictional “pretend games.” On October 2, 1884, the Oregonian newspaper of Portland, Oregon printed a story stating that a recent issue of the Denver Opinion had printed a story purporting to be a summary of an 11-year-old newspaper article in the Portland Oregonian about the 39-inning “Moonlight Game” played in 1873 between printers union teams of two Portland newspapers, the Oregonian and its bitter rival, the Daily Bulletin.

The game began at 12:30 P.M. After 22 innings, the teams were still locked in a scoreless tie, when the umpire called the game due to darkness. However, vigorous disagreement from fans and players caused the umpire to reconsider. Lanterns and locomotive headlights were found to light the field. A dinner delay was taken from 7:00 P.M. to 7:30 P.M.

At 1 A.M., in the bottom of the 39th, the Bulletin’s George Good lofted a long fly to right, which was dropped and booted by the Oregonian’s right fielder Estabrook for a 4-base error. Final score: Bulletin 1 Oregonian 0. Asked about his error by reporters after the game, Estabrook stated the moon had been shining in his face and he couldn’t see the ball.

It appears perfectly clear that this is a spoof, a game that never actually happened; just a fictional story invented by the newspaper writer. However, might there have been a real game in 1873 between the printers of the two newspapers? Yes, there might have been, although we have no actual evidence that there was.

The Oregonian actually did print an article on July 26, 1873, stating that the employees of an Oregon City newspaper had issued a baseball challenge to the employees of the Oregonian and that the game would take place. So there is a precedent for games between rival Oregon newspapers in 1873. And it is a fact that during 1873 there was an intense and bitter rivalry between the two Portland newspapers, the Oregonian and the Bulletin.

The papers squabbled fiercely and angrily that year over such issues as whom had provoked whom in the April 11 gun battle between the Peace Commissioners and the Modoc Native American tribe, the May scandal over whether Oregon’s newly elected Senator John H. Mitchell was a fraud and a bigamist (the Oregonian broke the story while the Bulletin supported Senator Mitchell), and over whether the August “Great Fire” which destroyed twenty downtown blocks in Portland was an arsonist plot (according to the Oregonian) or not a plot at all (according to the Bulletin).

Thirty-four years later, on July 7, 1907, the spoof innings record was raised from 39 to 50 innings in Munchausen, Pennsylvania, as the Lyerhelms and Fakenhursts played a 50-inning scoreless tie. The teams were named after their respective pitchers. Lyerhelm had a no-hitter, struck out 93, and gave up only one walk. Fakenhurst had a perfect game and struck out 89. The "Liars" and "Fakers" played in a town named after the Baron von Munchausen (1720–97), the famous German storyteller whose fictional tall tales were so outrageous and ridiculous that the medical condition for compulsive lying, Munchausen's Syndrome, is named after him.

The next year, the spoof innings record was raised from 50 to 57 when the May 17, 1908, Washington Post recounted the "Firefly Game" of 1907 at Jones County Eye, Ear, and Tongue Infirmary. Although the state is not mentioned, it can be presumed to be New York, since Schenectady is prominently mentioned. The Lightfoot Lilies downed the Ringtail Roarers in 57 innings. The game was called a tie at dusk after 17 innings, but just as in the Portland "Moonlight Game" of 1873, vigorous disagreement from fans and players caused the umpire to reconsider. A farmer drove his horse-drawn wagon to a nearby university's chemistry lab to obtain phosphorus, which was smeared on the baseball to make it highly visible, enabling the game to be continued after only a 23-minute delay.

As dawn approached, the Lilies took a 1–0 lead in the top of the 57th on a mammoth home run by Bull Thompson. In the bottom of the 57th, Bruiser Brown was at bat with a full count, runners on 2nd and 3rd, and only one out. The Lilies pitcher picked the Roarers runner off 2nd: "Like a flash, he shot the ball over to second, catching the runner off base by a good three yards. At almost the same instant, an innocent firefly started up out of the grass and flitted across the plate. 'Swish.' Nervous and overstrung, Bruiser Brown had struck viciously at the firefly. Three strikes and out. Double play. Side out. Just then, clear and triumphant, through the clear night air sounded the crowing of a cock in some distant barnyard. Dawn was breaking." Final score: Lilies 1 Roarers 0.

After another two decades, another spoof came along, this time a 33-inning game in the August 1, 1926, Washington Post: "St. Louis Insects defeated the Georgetown nine, 5–4, in a 33-inning ball game, according to a report made by Manager Tastle of the winners, who stated pitcher Tastle went the full route. Slornoi of the losing team pitched only 20 innings before being relieved." A detailed search has revealed no evidence a team named the St. Louis Insects ever existed.

The last major spoof occurred in October 2003, authored by espn.com. The Cubs, hoping to finally win a World Series after waiting patiently since 1908, and the Red Sox, then waiting since 1918, met in the 2003 World Series to determine the answer, once and for all, to the question, "Whose curse is worse?" The Red Sox led 1–0 as the Cubs came to bat in the top of the ninth of Game 7 at Fenway.

With Fate desperately looking for a way to allow neither team to win, Sammy Sosa came to the plate with two outs, two strikes, nobody on, and the Cubs down to their last strike. He promptly hit the first home run to ever bounce off the distant Citgo sign in left center, sending the game into extra innings. As the game entered the 13th, fire and brimstone rained down from the sky, but Red Sox manager Grady Little stayed with Pedro Martinez and Cubs manager Dusty Baker stayed with Kerry Wood. After each inning thereafter, Little stayed with Pedro and Baker stayed with Wood.

Finally, as dawn approached in the 28th, with the score 34–34, a meteorite struck the home of soon-to-be Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger in Sacramento, floods covered the globe, a dust cloud encircled the planet, and temperatures dropped precipitously by 30 degrees worldwide, killing most crops. The result of all this chaos was mass starvation, near-extinction of the human race, and suspension of Game 7 of the World Series with the score still tied in the 28th. Final score: Cubs 34 Red Sox 34, with both teams still waiting to win the Series. Little then did the Red Sox know that they would wait only one more year!

Year of the Marathon: 1907

The spoofs of Munchausen and Jones County were spawned by the unique "Year of the Marathon" in 1907, a season which saw three record-breaking marathons come along in rapid succession within only 27 days. The W.P. Kinsella novel, Iowa Baseball Confederacy, also took place in the same general time period, the next year in 1908. The total of 20 marathons in the year 1907 is still today more than in any other year. Since 1877, when the first marathon took place, the only years when no marathon has occurred are 1879, 1881–90, 1893–97, 1899, and 1961.

There were four major league marathons in two years (1967, 1971), whereas there have been none in long stretches of time (21 years 1871–91; 15 years 1947–61; nine years 1994–2002). We've had only six since 1984 (two in 1989, two in 1993, one in 2003, and our last one, April 17, 2008).

On June 8, 1907, a 28-inning game was played at Dorchester Franklin Field Diamond #5 in Boston. Henry L. Pierce Grammar School of Dorchester defeated Bennet Grammar School of Brighton 4–3 in 5 hours 50 minutes.

Less than a month later, there was a 30-inning game played July 4 at Brookside Park in Cleveland. The Brooklyn Athletic Club defeated Cleveland's East End All Stars 4–1, again in 5 hours 50 minutes.

And then the very next day, July 5, again in Ohio at Recreation Park in Columbus, there was a 36-inning game. The Heintz Victors and Columbus Selects played to a 2–2 tie in 3 hours 50 minutes. Heintz was also referred to in Columbus papers as Heints, with an “s” instead of a “z.”

Unfortunately, although a century later this 36-inning game is still tied for the longest game by innings ever played in the U.S., we know almost nothing about it. The only article on the game is in the July 6 Columbus Citizen on page 5. The headline states, “Here’s a World’s Record.” But then the article takes up only five sentences, telling us only that it was a morning game called due to players’ exhaustion rather than darkness, Victors pitcher Decker struck out 20 while Selects pitcher Robins struck out only 19, each team got 8 hits, the Victors scored in the 5th and 31st while the Selects scored in the 6th and 31st, and the Victors made 5 errors while the Selects made 7.

We also know almost nothing about the only other 36-inning game, played August 28, 1880, at North End Grounds in Stoneham, Massachusetts. Before 350 fans, Zouaves downed the Benecia Boys 21 to 15.

Why would there be many more marathons in the 1900s (71) and 1910s (79) than in any other decades, ranging from lows of one in the 1880s, two in the 1870s, and five in the 1890s to respectively 30, 36, 41, 56, 45, 56, 47, 30, and 41 from the 1920s through the 2000s? Because to become long marathons, games must maximize the chance that both teams score equal numbers of runs, which happens most easily when both teams go scoreless for many innings, such as would happen during the Deadball Era of 1901–1919.

Using such reasoning, one might also argue that a larger number of marathons should have happened during the Huge Strike Zone era of 1963–68, and this does appear to be the case. In the 1960s, there were 45 marathons, ten during the four years when the strike zone was normal or 2.5 marathons per year, and 35 during the six years when the strike zone was enlarged or 5.8 marathons per year.

Longest Czech Game and the Beatles: Strawberry Fields Forever

On May 10, 2003, the longest Czech extra-inning game ever played was decided in Blansko. Arrows Ostrava defeated Olympia Blansko 5–4 in 15 innings at the best-named ballpark in the world, Strawberry Fields Forever, named in honor of John Lennon and the Beatles. The second-best-named and third-best-named ballparks, the Big Egg domed stadium in Tokyo, Japan, and the Eagle’s Nest in Mexicali, Mexico have thus far not distinguished themselves in any way with marathons.

Famous Players in Marathons: Iron Man, Cy, the Say Hey Kid, & Yaz

Hall of Famer Joe “Iron Man” McGinnity owed his major league career to a marathon in the Western Association. Iron Man went the distance for the Peoria Blackbirds as they defeated the visiting St. Joseph Saints 8–4 in 21 innings June 27, 1898. His pitching was so impressive that day that the Orioles signed him for the 1899 NL season.

Hall of Famers Cy Young of the Red Sox and Rube Waddell of the A’s faced off in a 20-inning marathon in the P.M. game of a morning/afternoon doubleheader July 4, 1905, at Huntington Grounds in Boston. Both teams scored two in the 9th. Then in the 20th, with two on, Young broke A’s batter Jack Knight’s arm with a brushback pitch on the inside corner. With the bases now full, Young induced the next batter to hit a double play grounder, but his infielder made an error, allowing the A’s to win 4–2. These two greats faced each other previously May 5, 1904. Young pitched a perfect game that day, with the Red Sox winning 3–0.

Another pitcher named Jacob Jung, was nicknamed “Cy Young VII.” A graduate of the University of Wisconsin, he pitched 17 innings of no-hit ball but then gave up 7 hits over the last four innings while going the whole way in a losing cause for the Milwaukee White Sox July 19, 1908. The visiting Sox lost the 21-inning Lakeshore League game to the hometown Sheboygan Chairmakers 1–0. This “Cy” was signed soon thereafter by the Cubs on August 10, 1908, but he never pitched for them. A third fellow nicknamed “Cy” Young had a 2–3 record for the Federal League Balt-Feds in 1915. In deference to the Hall of Famer, almost every pitcher named Young was nicknamed “Cy” in the early 1900s. There was a Cy the Second, Irv Young, and a Cy the Third, Harley Young, who were traded for each other by the Braves and Pirates June 18, 1908. Irv pitched 172 innings in the majors in 1908, while Harley pitched 75.

Hall of Famer Willie Mays, the “Say Hey Kid,” played center field and shortstop May 31, 1964, for the Giants as they defeated the Mets 8–6 in 23 innings in the second game of a doubleheader at Shea. In the bottom of the seventh, with two on and the Mets trailing 6–3, Joe Christopher hit a long fly to right center. Mays raced back, leaped high above the 8-foot high fence, and caught the ball, but as he collided with the fence, the ball dropped out of his glove and over the fence for a 3-run homer. This ended the scoring until Del Crandall hit the game-winning RBI in the 23rd.

Hall of Famer Carl Yastrzemski played in the memorable 20-inning Red Sox–Yankee marathon at Yankee Stadium August 29, 1967. In the second game of a twin-nighter, Yaz had six putouts in left, and went 0 for 6 with 3 walks. Both teams scored in the 11th. The Yanks won 4–3 after the Sox loaded the bases but failed to score in the 20th.

First-Ever Games of (X) Innings

Baseball was possibly played as early as 1791 in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. The next mention of a baseball game is April 26, 1823, at Mr. Jones’s Retreat in Broadway in New York City. This was a pick-up game, meaning there were no organized teams. Rules called for a team scoring 21 runs first to be declared the winner. It would not be until May 1857 the winner would be the team with the most runs after nine innings, and then only if the teams were not playing by Massachusetts Rules.

A game played nine years later in 1832, again in New York City at Madison Square, may have been the first game ever between two relatively organized teams. A team representing 1st Ward of Lower Manhattan played a team representing the 9th and 15th Wards of Upper Manhattan. Just four years later, in 1836, at the Baseball Grounds in Canton, China, the Boston Union Club played the English Club. In all three of these groundbreaking games, we have neither a record of the number of innings nor a final score.

The first-ever 3-inning game may have been at Elysian Fields in Hoboken, New Jersey October 6, 1845, as the New York Knickerbockers played an intrasquad game. The final score was 11–8, with seven players on each side. The first-ever 4-inning game may have been at Elysian Fields later that month, on October 21. The New York Base Ball Club beat the Brooklyn Base Ball Club 24–4, with eight players on each side. The first-ever 5-inning game may have been another Knickerbocker intrasquad game at Elysian Fields in October 1845, with the final score 33–26.

The first-ever game to last more than 9 innings may have been the 10-inning game November 18, 1845, at Elysian Fields. William R. Wheaton's Team beat William H. Tucker's Team 51–42. The 21-Rule called for a team scoring 21 runs first to be declared the winner, so these two teams must have either had several ties at the end of innings, or they must have both exploded offensively in the tenth inning.

The record for longest game stood at 10 innings for seven years, until June 24 or 27, 1852 when the Gothams took 16 innings to beat the Knickerbockers 21–16 at Red House Grounds in New York City. The first-ever 6-inning game may have occurred the next year, July 16, 1853, at Red House Grounds, as the Knickerbockers beat the Gothams 21–12 in the first-ever game with a box score.

The first-ever 9-inning game under the new rules establishing 9 innings as the normal length of the game unless tied, may have been at Madison Square in May 1857 in a Knickerbocker intrasquad game. The first-ever extra inning game under new 9-inning rules may have been in Brooklyn June 6, 1865. The Gothams scored in the 9th to tie Enterprise at 17. In the 13th, Enterprise scored one, but Gothams then scored two to win, 19–18.

Longest Planned Marathons: Gray Birds and Red-Eyed Nites

Some games have been planned as marathons, usually as a fundraiser for a charitable cause. There have been many such games. The Women's Marathon 24 Hours for Africa lasted 65 innings October 18–19, 2003, at Tucson Electric Park in Arizona, and raised $60,000 to assist AIDS victims in Africa. The African Gray Birds defeated the Red-Eyed Nites 127–110. Seventy-two players from Japan, Australia, and 18 U.S. states participated, ranging in age from 13 to 80. Official time of game was 24 hours 12 minutes. There were 100 fans at the start at eight minutes after Noon, 50 fans at 6 P.M., 25 fans at Midnight, 0 fans the next morning at 6 A.M., and 12 loyal fans there when the game ended at 12:20 P.M.

Many other planned baseball marathons are known to have taken place. One involved the Portland State University team playing 102 innings in Oregon. Another involved the Augusta College and University of South Carolina–Aiken teams playing 105 innings. One involved Springbrook High School in Silver Spring, Maryland for 100 innings. Another occurred at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, with two high schools playing 100 innings to raise funds for a trip to Australia. There were fundraisers for the Friends University baseball team in Wichita, Kansas which took 79 and 100 innings respectively. Numerous games have been sponsored by Curt Schilling and the Boston Men's Adult Baseball League (MABL), one lasting 101 innings. One involved two amateur teams playing 84 innings in Alliance, Nebraska. The highest number of innings reported for such planned marathons are 325 innings in Appleton, Wisconsin August 18–20, 1972, and 320 innings in Burlington, Wisconsin June 10–11, 1972, both raising funds for medical research.

Longest Military Marathons: 23 Innings in Virginia and 21 Innings in Guam

The longest game ever played by Air Force and Army teams is the 23-inning game at Langley Flying Field in Hampton, Virginia in 1923 when the Fort Monroe Army Artillerymen and the Langley Air Force Birdmen played to a 2–2 tie. The longest game ever played by a Navy team is the 21-inning game played May 6, 1945, at the Third Marine Division Field in Guam. Before 1000 fans, the 41st Construction Battalion Navy Seebes defeated the U.S. Navy Base Rinkeydinks 2–1.

Possibly an even longer game may have been played by two Army teams October 20, 2003, in occupied Iraq by teams from the 101st Airborne Division at Delta Company Desperados Field, a makeshift ballpark in the desert near Tell 'Afar. The teams were managed by Captains Hunter Marshall and Adam Kumann. The game supposedly started after Midnight and lasted until almost Dawn. Unfortunately, nobody kept records of the score or number of innings.

Longest Women's Marathons: 22 Innings in Racine and Muskegon

On July 31, 1947, at Horlick Field in Racine, Wisconsin, the South Bend Blue Sox defeated the Racine Belles 4–3 in 22 innings. This women's record was tied two years later at Marsh Field in Muskegon, Michigan as the Muskegon Lassies downed the Rockford Peaches 1–0. The All-American Girls' Professional Baseball League was organized during World War II, and continued with teams from the midwestern part of the country from 1943 through 1954. The league was the subject of the movie "A League of Their Own" starring Geena Davis, Madonna, and Tom Hanks.

Longest High School Marathons: 27 Innings in Obe City

When the supposed "28-inning" 1976 game in Indiana was proven in 2004 to have actually been three separate games, the record for longest high school game reverted to 27 innings. In Ube City, Japan, Matsue-sho defeated Shimonoseki-sho 2–0 May 13–14, 1973.

Ballparks & Cities in Marathons: The Bee Hive

The ballpark which has hosted the most marathons lasting 20 or more innings is Braves Field in Boston, now known as Boston University's Nickerson Field. This is appropriate, since Braves Field hosted the longest major league game ever played, 26 innings. Braves Field hosted five marathons, two held between April 17, 1936, and April 23, 1941, when the Braves were officially named the Bees and the ballpark was known as the Bee Hive.

Old Comiskey Park hosted four marathons, including an American Giants game in the Negro American League and three White Sox games in the AL, one of which was the longest AL game ever played, 25 innings. Korakuen Stadium in Tokyo also hosted four. Wrigley Field and Baker Bowl each hosted three.

Boston has hosted 15 marathons: five by the Braves, four amateur games, three by the Red Sox, two grammar school games, and the first one ever played, a scoreless 24-inning tie between a professional team from Manchester, New Hampshire and the Harvard College Crimson on May 11, 1877. This is the most by any city. Chicago has hosted nine, San Antonio and Tokyo seven, Philadelphia six.

Major league marathons come in seemingly irrational spurts. There have been 49 major league marathons. The American League has had 18. The Negro Leagues had two. The National League has had 27 during the regular season, and two more during spring training, hosted by the St. Louis Browns in 1898 and by the Philadelphia Phillies in 1921.

The Philadelphia Phillies and Boston Braves have each hosted five marathons lasting 20 or more innings, the most by any major league teams. The Red Sox, White Sox, Twins, Cubs, and Padres are next, having hosted three. The Orioles, Royals, Mariners, Rays, Rangers, Blue Jays, Diamondbacks, Rockies, Brewers, Giants, and Nationals have never hosted such a game.

Longest Major League Marathon: 26 Innings at Braves Field

At old Comiskey Park on May 8–9, 1984, the White Sox downed the Brewers 7–6 in 25 innings and 8 hours 6 minutes, the American League record for innings. Suspended after 17 innings at 1:05 A.M. by the AL curfew, the game was won the next evening in the 25th by Harold Baines' homer which just barely cleared the bullpen fence in center. The White Sox scored two in the 9th, and three in the 21st to keep the game tied, and would have won in the 23rd except that Dave Stegman was ruled out for coach's interference when third base coach Jim Leyland helped him to his feet after Stegman tripped rounding third.

This game is rich in "might-have-been's." Had it been an NL game with no curfew, it would have ended at 3:42 A.M. Had it been played between 1910 and 1948 or 1976 and 1980 when old Comiskey had no inner fence in center, Baines' drive would have been caught and the two teams might have broken the major league record of 26 innings. Best of all, had the game been the nightcap of the foggy September 24, 1971, Astros at Padres two-night doubleheader which began at 12:01 A.M., it would have finished at 8:07 A.M., and the last few innings could have been covered live by Bryant Gumbel and Jane Pauley on the "Today Show."

On September 11, 1974, Ken Reitz's two-run homer for the Cards with two outs in the 9th tied up the Mets 3–3 at Shea. The pitchers then took total control for 15 innings. Only a hardy thousand of the original crowd of 13,460 remained to see Bake McBride score all the way from first in the 25th when Mets pitcher Hank Webb's pickoff throw to first was wild, and the relay to the plate from the outfield was dropped by catcher Ron Hodges to give the Cards a 4–3 win.

As home plate umpire Ed Sudol ruled the sliding McBride safe at the plate, he couldn't help but remember he had also been behind the plate during two other Mets marathon losses: 23 innings to the Giants in 1964, and 24 innings to the Astros in 1968. At the end, after 7 hours 4 minutes of baseball, the huge right field scoreboard clock read 3:13 A.M. Amazingly, the first base umpire had called a balk on the wild pickoff throw. Under a rule recently changed, which had balk calls superceding advances on wild pickoff throws, McBride would have been required to return to second base. He might never have scored, and the game might never have ended.

There were two 20-inning marathons in the Negro Leagues (1920–63). Both were played in Chicago and involved the hometown American Giants. The first came in a Negro National League (1920–31, 1933–48) game at Schorling's Park August 16, 1922, as the American Giants defeated the Atlantic City Bacharach Giants 1–0. The second came in a Negro American League (1937–63) game at old Comiskey Park May 12, 1946, as the American Giants tied the Indianapolis Clowns 3–3. In front of a crowd of 10,000, pitchers Gentry Jessup of the American Giants and Peanut Davis of the Clowns both went the distance. The Clowns were leading in the bottom of the 9th when McCurrine tripled to score Young, and send the game into extra frames.

Nine major leagues never had a marathon: National Association (1871–75), Union Association (1884), American Association (1892–91), Players League (1890), Federal League (1914–15), Eastern Colored League (1923–28), American Negro League (1929), Negro East-West League (1932), and Negro Southern League (1932).

When nine innings was established as the first major league record for longest game is a matter of dispute. On April 22, 1871, the Washington Olympics and Washington Nationals, both fledgling members of the new National Association, baseball's first professional major league, met at Olympics Grounds for the first-ever major league game. The Olympics prevailed 36–12 in nine innings, thus setting the first major league record for longest game by innings. However, the Nationals subsequently were dropped from the league because they failed to pay their $10 league dues, and their five official games were dropped from league standings in July 1871.

The honor of "first major league game," and with it the honor of establishing the first major league record for longest game by innings, thus went "after-the-fact" to the Fort Wayne Kekiongas and Forest City's of Cleveland, who met twelve days later on May 4, 1871, at the Grand Duchess in Fort Wayne, Indiana. The Kekiongas won 2–0, before 200 fans. Although this is considered the first major league game ever played, if one believes history cannot and should not be altered "after-the-fact," then it is really the second major league game.

There is absolutely no dispute whatsoever as to the longest major league game ever played. On May 1, 1920, the Boston Braves hosted the Brooklyn Robins at Braves Field. The game took 26 innings and lasted 3 hours 50 minutes, but ended as a 1–1 tie when called at 6:50 P.M. on account of darkness by Umpire Barry McCormick. Two thousand fans saw starting pitchers Joe Oeschger of the Braves and Leon Cadore of the Robins go the whole way. This feat could never happen now, with all the emphasis on specialized relief pitchers, but starting pitchers commonly pitched entire marathons in the early part of the Twentieth Century.

According to the next day's New York Times, "In the matter of thrills, the oldest living man can remember nothing like it, nor can he find anything in his grandfather's diary worthy of comparison. Heart disease was the mildest complaint that grasped the spectators as they watched inning after inning slip away and the row of ciphers on the scoreboard begin to slide over the fence and reach out into the Fenway. Nervous prostration threatened to engulf the stands."

At the end of the game, Robins shortstop Ivy Olson implored McCormick to allow the game to continue for one more inning so he could tell his grandkids he played three entire games in one afternoon. McCormick's reply was, "Not without a miner's lamp!" perhaps based on those spoofs a decade earlier which would have us believe a 39-inning game in Portland, Oregon, was made possible by lanterns and locomotive headlights, and a 57-inning game in Jones County, New York, was made possible by rubbing phosphorus on the baseball.

Longest Consecutive Games

The Robins' next two games were in Philadelphia May 2 against the Phils and then back in Brooklyn May 3 vs. the Braves. They took 13 and 19 innings respectively to lose both. So in just three games, they played 58 innings, losing two and tying one, a three-game record for futility which will probably never be equaled.

You would think that the Robins would hold the record for most innings in two consecutive games, with 26 innings on May 1 vs. the Braves and then 13 innings on May 2 vs. the Phils for a total of 39 innings. But you would be wrong! This record is 40 innings, held by the Cubs and Braves. At Braves Field, on May 14 and May 17, 1927, the Cubs beat the Braves 7–2 in 18 innings, and then 4–3 in 22 innings. The AL record is 37 innings, held by the Brewers and Twins. At Met Stadium, on May 12 and May 13, 1972, the Brewers won 4–3 in 22 innings; then the Twins won 5–4 in 15 innings.

Longest Separate Games to Reach One Decision

You would also think the Braves and Robins must hold the record for combined innings for two separate games to reach one decision, when the first game was tied and had to be replayed in its entirety. And the September 20, 1945, Sporting News would back you up, because it states on page 18 that the make-up of the 26-inning game was the 19-inning game in Brooklyn on May 3, for a total of 45 innings.

But both you and the Sporting News would be wrong! The May 3 game was on the original schedule. The make-up game was actually the second game of a doubleheader on June 25 at Braves Field. By adding the nine innings and 1:40 played in that game to finally have the Braves win 4–2 once and for all what had began May 1, to the 26 innings played May 1, you have 35 innings in 5 hours 30 minutes over two days. Surely, you say, this 35 innings must be the major league record?

But you would be wrong a second time! The A's and Tigers hold the professional and major league record: 40 innings, in 7 hours 57 minutes over two days. On July 21, 1945, they played a 1–1 tie in 24 innings and 4:48 at Shibe Park. When they met on September 12 in the second game of a doubleheader, again at Shibe Park, to finally come to a decision, the A's took 16 innings and 3:09 to win 3–2.

However, if you measure it by elapsed time rather than by innings, then the Phillies and the Cubs hold the record, at 9 hours 35 minutes, in 37 innings over four days. On May 5, 1930, at Wrigley Field, the Cubs led the Phils 1–0 after 30 minutes, 1 inning, and a 50-minute rain delay in the top of the 2nd, when the game was washed out after an elapsed time of 1:20. On August 16, in the second game of a doubleheader, they tied 3–3 in 2:15 and 11 innings. On August 19, they tried a third time and tied again, once again in the second game of a doubleheader, this time 6–6 in 3:38 and 16 innings.

Finally, on August 20, in their fourth try, they finally arrived at a conclusion, the Phils winning 10–8 in 2:22 and only 9 innings! The two teams played 20 innings in the August 16 DH, 9 innings on August 17, 9 innings on August 18, 25 innings in the August 19 DH, and 9 innings on August 20. The 72-inning 5-day series decimated the Cubs' pitching staff, and probably cost them the 1930 pennant.

Baseball Digest published an article in February 1968 trying to sort this all out. Here is an illustration of how complicated it all was. The article contains seven (7) errors. For the Robins and Braves in 1920, they called the Robins the Dodgers. For the Phillies and Cubs in 1930, they gave August 18 rather than August 19 as the date for the third of the four games, August 19 rather than August 20 as the date for the fourth of the four games, and the August 19 crowd as 26,000 rather than 36,000. For the Athletics and Tigers in 1945, they listed the combined time as 7:56 rather than 7:57, the July 21, 1945, crowd as 4235 rather than 4536, and the time of game as 4:47 rather than 4:48.

The Chicago Tribune also had trouble sorting it all out. In their discussion of the July 21, 1945, Tigers at A's 24-inning game, they stated the record-long 26-inning May 1, 1920, Robins at Braves had taken 5 hours 19 minutes, when in fact it took only 3 hours 50 minutes. The Dodgers at Braves 20-inning July 15, 1940, game is the game that took 5 hours 19 minutes.

And of course we can't forget the two marathons mentioned earlier. The high school "separate-games-to-reach-one-decision" record is held by the 28-inning "game that was never played" over six days in 1976 between Griffith and Highland High Schools in Indiana, and the all-time "separate-games-to-reach-one-decision" record is held by the 54-inning "game that was never played" over six days in 1925–1926 between Cascade and Ryan in Iowa.

Most Interesting Discovery: Montana Reports the News from Wisconsin

The research process involved in discovering these marathon games has taken me to the Hall of Fame Libraries in Cooperstown, New York, and the Big Egg in Tokyo, Japan, and just about everywhere in between, including hundreds of ballparks and libraries.

The most unusual discovery was the June 15, 1939, 21-inning 5 hours 15 minutes marathon in Clintonville, Wisconsin which finished at 1:45 A.M. The Clintonville Four-Wheel-Drive (FWD) Truckers defeated Two Rivers Polar Bears 1–0. This game was discovered in a small article found in the June 29, 1939, Daily Independent of Helena, Montana, adjoining a story I had found on the Kansas City Monarchs barnstorming visit to Helena. Helena resident H.E. Danner reported the game from two weeks prior because his home town was originally Clintonville.

Longest College Marathon: 32 Innings in Bradenton

College baseball in the U.S. is due for a "breakout" marathon game. The record for 4-year colleges is held by a recent 25-inning National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) playoff game held May 30, 2009, at UFCU Disch-Falk Field in Austin, Texas. The Texas Longhorns defeated the Boston College (BC) Eagles 3–2 in 7 hours 3 minutes. Given the large number of 4-year college games, we should be expecting a much longer marathon some day soon.

The record for a junior college game was set April 4, 1987, at Robert C. Wynn Field in Bradenton, Florida. The Hillsborough Hawks defeated the Manatee Lancers 6–4 in 32 innings, over seven and a half hours. The original crowd of 200 had dwindled to just 45 loyal fans when the end came at 9:30 P.M.

Longest Minor League Marathon: 33 Innings in Pawtucket

On May 16, 1891, at 11th Street Grounds in Tacoma, the home town Tacoma Daisies downed the Seattle Blues 6–5 in 22 innings. According to the Tacoma newspaper, the 900 fans could be heard all the way to Seattle during the game. Just two months later, on July 18, 1891, the Grand Forks Forkers and Fargo Grain-growers took the train to Devil's Lake, North Dakota for a 4 P.M. Red River League game at the North Dakota State Militia Training Grounds. After 25 scoreless innings, the umpire called the game at 8:10 P.M. to allow both teams to catch the last train of the night to Grand Forks.

On June 14, 1966, at Al Lang Field in St. Petersburg, Florida, the Miami Marlins eked out a 4–3 win over the host St. Pete Cards, managed by future Reds and Tigers manager Sparky Anderson. A 2:00 A.M. announcement by umpires and managers stating the game would not continue past the 30th inning was greeted with jeers and cries of “More! More!” from the 150 night owls remaining from the original crowd of 750. The 29-inning record would stand for 15 years until broken in Rhode Island.

At 4:07 A.M. on Easter morning, April 19, 1981, just 51 minutes before sunrise, seventeen freezing and very fortunate souls huddled in the 28 degree pre-dawn chill of Pawtucket, Rhode Island’s McCoy Stadium, having just watched their beloved Paw Sox fail to break a 2–2 tie with the Rochester Red Wings in the bottom of the 32nd. When the umpires suspended the game, these brave 17 fans could look back on 8 hours 7 minutes of baseball, preceded by a half-hour power failure delay.

The game resumed two months later on June 23, and the mercury had risen to 80 degrees. McCoy was packed to capacity, and because the major leagues were on strike, the eyes of the entire baseball world were focused on Pawtucket. The Paw Sox won 3–2 in the 33rd on Dave Koza’s bases-loaded single. The final totals of 8 hours 55 minutes elapsed time, and 8 hours 25 minutes game time are modern baseball records, and 33 innings is still the all-time professional record.

Momentoes of this historic game are now buried in a time capsule beneath the field, where they join the 5-ton truck that in 1942 sank without a trace into the swampy outfield while McCoy was being built by Franklin Delano Roosevelt’s Works Progress Administration.

Longest Doubleheader Marathon: 34½ Innings in North Carolina

The most interesting doubleheader marathon was a 30-inning extravaganza held at San Diego’s Jack Murphy Stadium September 24, 1971. Houston took the opener 2–1 in 21 innings, and the second game began at one minute after Midnight. At 2:15 A.M., with the score tied 4–4 and one aboard in the bottom of the ninth, swirling soupy fog engulfed Mission Valley as Nate Colbert hit a fly ball right to Astros center fielder Cesar Cedenro, who promptly lost the ball in a fog bank. With two on base, and the remaining 100 fans of an original crowd of 6339 going berserk, even though they could hardly see the field, the Padres stood on the brink of victory, but the umpires halted play, hoping the fog would lift.

After a 14-minute delay, during which it became apparent the fog was not going anywhere soon, the umpires resumed play. Ollie Brown promptly brought an end to the evening’s festivities by hitting the first pitch for an RBI single to right. Right fielder Jim Wynn told reporters later that not only did he never see the ball, he couldn’t even see his own infielders. Radio listeners back in Houston, where it was 4:29 A.M., could not believe their ears!

The longest major league doubleheader was the 32-inning day-into-night affair described earlier in which Willie Mays played center and shortstop for the Giants at Shea May 31, 1964. The Giants swept the Mets, 5–3 in the opener and 8–6 in the nightcap in 23 innings. Eight thousand fans from the original crowd of 57,037 stayed until the bitter end at 11:25 P.M. WOR-TV broadcast all 32 innings, in the process attracting the highest number of viewers in the station’s entire history.

The longest doubleheader ever played was a North Carolina State League twinbill July 5, 1915, in Durham and Raleigh. The Raleigh Capitals downed the Durham Bulls 3–2 in 14 innings in the A.M. game at Raleigh. Then the two teams bussed over to Durham for the P.M. game.

Dayton, the first batter for the Bulls in the bottom of the 21st, hit a long fly ball down the line into the right field corner. As Capitals right fielder Chief Myers caught the ball, he stumbled and umpire Dooley ruled that he had dropped it. Dayton ended up on third with a triple, but a furious argument ensued, with Myers and all of the Capitals stating Myers had not dropped the ball. Myers was ejected, but the rhubarb continued unabated. Finally, seemingly to end the argument, Dooley called the game a 2–2 tie after 20½ innings on account of darkness, making a total of 34½ innings for the doubleheader.

Two other minor league doubleheaders have gone 30 or more innings. On May 6, 1928, the Sacramento Senators and Oakland Oaks split a 31-inning PCL doubleheader at Oaks Park in Emeryville, with the Senators taking the opener 5–2, and the Oaks grabbing the nightcap 7–6 in 22 innings. And just as our nation prepared to celebrate its 200th birthday, on May 30, 1976, the Burlington Bees swept a 30-inning Midwest League doubleheader from the hometown Waterloo Royals. Both games went extra innings, with the Bees taking both the lidlifter 4–3 in 22 innings, and the late game by an identical score in 8 innings.

A 29-inning long NAIA college marathon for the Mesa State Mavericks of Grand Junction, Colorado almost became a 38-inning tripleheader. On May 2, 1981, Mesa State defeated New Mexico Highlands 9–8 in 20 innings in a morning Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference (RMAC) tournament game in Cedar City, Utah. That put Mesa State, with one loss, into the finals against Southern Utah State, with no losses. If Southern Utah State won, it would be all over. However, if Mesa State won, then they would be tied with one loss apiece, and another game would need to be played immediately afterwards to determine the RMAC champion. Trailing 4–1, Southern Utah State scored four in the 8th inning to win, 5–4, thus preventing Mesa State from playing 38 innings in one day.

Longest Triple/Sextupleheaders: 47 Innings in Manchester

I have come across 72 occasions involving three or more games in one day: 59 tripleheaders, 11 quadrupleheaders, one quintupleheader, and one sextupleheader. The three major league ones were in the NL, and two were sweeps. In Brooklyn, September 1, 1890, the Dodgers swept three from Pittsburgh, 10–9, 3–2, and 8–4, a total of 27 innings. In Baltimore, September 7, 1896, the Orioles swept three from Louisville, 4–3, 9–1, and 12–1 in 8 innings, a total of 26 innings. And in Pittsburgh, October 2, 1920, the Pirates lost 2 out of 3 to Cincinnati, losing the first two 13–4 and 7–3, and winning the third 6–0 when it was called due to darkness at 6 P.M. after 6 innings, a total of 24 innings.

There were two tripleheaders September 22, 1902, in the American Association, across town from each other. The Louisville Colonels swept three from the Millers in Minneapolis at Nicollet Park by 9–0 (a forfeit because the Millers showed up late), 4–0, and 4–3; while across town, the Indianapolis Indians swept three from the Apostles in St. Paul at Lexington Park.

There has never been a major league quadrupleheader or longer. There has been just one sextupleheader, a sweep! In Manchester, New Hampshire, September 4, 1899, in the New England League, the hometown Manchester sweep six from the Portland Phenoms by 14–7, 12–8, 12–2, 8–4, 9–1, and a 9–0 forfeit. They played two games before lunch, and four afterwards. Portland walked off the field and forfeited after two innings in the sixth game to protest the umpire's decision to eject one of their players, but the first five games lasted nine innings each, a total of 47 innings for the sextupleheader. The six losses in one day constituted over 15 percent of the Phenoms' losses for the year, as they won the league title with a 61–39 record.

Longest Marathons Which Broke No Records: Don't Wreck Everything!

Two 27-inning minor league games, although tied for third longest minor league game ever, have received no attention whatsoever because they were played after the Pawtucket 33-inning marathon in 1981 and therefore broke no records.

The first one was a three-day long thriller at MacArthur Stadium in Syracuse, one of only three minor league parks which hosted at least three marathons. On June 19, 1985, the Pawtucket Paw Sox and Syracuse Chiefs played 22 innings. The game was suspended at 1:07 A.M. after the Chiefs loaded the bases in the bottom of the 22nd but failed to score.

The next night was rainy. After a 13-minute rain delay in the top of the 23rd, and another lasting 50 minutes in the bottom of the 24th, the game was suspended a second time at 9:05 P.M. due to rain after 23½ innings. After 3½ more innings June 21, the Paw Sox finally won 3–1 at 7:31 P.M., and the regularly scheduled game was rained out. Total game time: 7 hours 7 minutes.

What makes this game even more amazing is it was the second time in just over a week the Syracuse Chiefs had lost a three-day marathon! On June 10, just nine days earlier, the Chiefs-Clippers game in Columbus was suspended after 20 innings. It was rained out June 11, and the Chiefs lost 8–7 in the 21st June 12.

Three years later, June 24, 1988, at Athletic Stadium in Burlington, North Carolina, the Bluefield Orioles (Baby Birds) came to town for an Appalachian League game against the hometown Indians. When the Orioles finally won by a score of 3–2, the game had taken 8 hours 15 minutes, it was 3:27 A.M., and the crowd of 2204 fans had dwindled to just either 84 or 50. Why the uncertainty on remaining fans at the end?

Apparently, the sportswriters were sleepy because they had remarkably different accounts. Craig Holt of the Burlington Times-News counted 84 fans at the end, but wrote incorrectly that the finish had been at 3:37 A.M. rather than at 3:27 A.M. Dale Mullins of the Bluefield Daily Telegraph counted 50 fans at the end, and got the finish time correct as 3:27 A.M., but wrote incorrectly that the game had taken place in Raleigh rather than in Burlington.

As for whether such games should be suspended or played to completion, I wholeheartedly agree with the sentiments of Baby Birds manager Glenn Gulliver on late-night marathons. After the game he told reporters, "I do not favor suspending games, no matter how long they take. That would wreck everything. Once the game gets so far along, and you still have a chance to win, you don't want to quit. You want to go until somebody wins." Amen! Suspension will always be a bad idea that wrecks everything. Let the ballplayers play on to a conclusion!

Longest Marathon: 45 Innings for the Emperor's Cup in Mito

Outside the U.S. there have been 91 marathons lasting 20 or more innings played. Latin America has the most, with 40: 17 in Mexico, nine in Cuba, five in Puerto Rico, four in Nicaragua, two in the Dominican, and one each in Brazil, Colombia, and Venezuela. Asia has 27: 25 in Japan and two in Taiwan. Canada has 17. Oceania has five: four in Australia and one in Guam. Europe has two: one each in France and Germany. Africa has yet to experience a marathon. The longest game in Africa thus far was 14 innings between Ghana and Togo.

Neither polar region has yet experienced a marathon. On March 25, 1960, the Arctic innings record was set at 90 Degrees North Latitude as two U.S. Navy Seadragon Nuclear Submarine teams played nine innings at the North Pole. On New Year's Day 1997, the Antarctic innings record was set at 77 Degrees 55 Minutes South Latitude as two McMurdo Sound teams played 10 innings on the North Cargo Staging Area Ballpark Pad. Both polar record games were played on the ice, and sliding was for everyone not just baserunners.

On May 24, 1942, just 11 days before the Battle of Midway (June 4–7) began, Taiyo and Nagoya of the Japanese Professional Federation struggled to a 28-inning 4–4 tie, setting a new organized baseball record. Seventeen years later, May 2, 1959, Nippon Pharmaceuticals defeated Kurashiki Rayon 2–1 in a 29-inning industrial league game. So Japan had some experience with marathon games.

But when play began September 20, 1983, in the title game of the 38th annual Emperor's Cup Nanshiki Tournament at Ibaraki-Mito Prefectural Stadium in Mito, Japan, nobody had the least idea what lay ahead! The game between Light Manufacturing (Raito Kogyo) of Tokyo and Tanaka Hospital (Byouin) of Miyazaki was to begin at 9 A.M. The first pitch came ten minutes early at 8:50 A.M. The local Mito Band was to play at the award ceremony after the game, and was asked to be ready at 11 A.M. As Noon came and went, the teams were locked in a scoreless tie. After the 25th, plate umpire Choshu told the teams to take a 30-minute break.

The players refused. Choshu joined his fellow umpers Igari, Sakurai, and Suzuki for a short 6-minute break, and then the game moved on to the 26th. In the 35th inning, both teams pushed across one run, so the marathon continued. Finally, the game concluded at 5:15 P.M. after Light Manufacturing scored in the top of the 45th to win 2–1. Final totals: 1029 pitches and 8 hours 19 minutes of baseball! Including the 6-minute delay in the 26th, the game actually lasted 8 hours 25 minutes.

Excluding Massachusetts Rules games and games planned as marathons to raise funds for charity, this is the longest game by innings in the history of baseball. The Mito Band finally got to play after waiting around for over six hours.

How Many Games Go into Extra Innings?

How many games go into extra innings? My detailed research into lengths of major league games indicates a little less than 6 percent went into extra innings in the 1800s, when late afternoon 4 P.M. starting times resulted in many games being called due to darkness before they ever had the opportunity to go into extra innings, and between 9 percent and 10 percent have gone into extra innings in the 1900s and 2000s.

To get a good empirical estimate of the percentage of extra-inning games before the current night-ball era, I began with the first two decades of major league baseball, from 1871 to 1889. For these 19 years, in the National Association (1871–75), National League (1876–89), American Association (1882–89), and Union Association (1884), there were 10,790 regular season games, plus 50 World Series games (1884–89), a total of 10,840 games in 1871–89. 126 of these games or 1.2 percent were ties. Because of darkness or weather, 662 or 6.1 percent of these games were official games taking less than 9 innings: 43 were forfeits, 55 went 5 innings, 114 went 6 innings, 200 went 7 innings, 250 went 8 innings. 307 games went 10 innings, 158 went 11 innings, 69 went 12 innings, 43 went 13 innings, 24 went 14 innings, 8 went 15 innings, 6 went 16 innings, and one went 18 innings. A total of 616 or 5.68 percent out of 10,840 went extra innings.

Many more games in this period would have gone extra innings had they had the time to do so, but lack of ballpark lights and late afternoon starting times conspired to limit the number of extra-inning contests. So the fact that a little less than 6 percent of major league games went extra innings could be expected to apply only until either starting times were advanced to earlier in the afternoon or until lights were placed in ballparks.

Before I became aware of Dave Smith's database on extra-inning games, to get a good estimate of the percentage of extra-inning games in the recent night-ball era, I decided to do a 100 percent inventory of every major league game in the 1980s. In that decade (1980–89), in the American and National Leagues, 20,337 regular season games were played, plus 19 League Division Series (LDS) games, 99 League Championship Series (LCS) games, and 59 World Series games, a total of 20,514 games played in the 1980s. 866 games went 10 innings, 471 went 11 innings, 274 went 12 innings, 150 went 13 innings, 88 went 14 innings, 39 went 15 innings, 29 went 16 innings, 19 went 17 innings, 10 went 18 innings, 3 went 19 innings, 4 went 20 innings, one went 21 innings, two went 22 innings, and one went 25 innings. A total of 1,957 or 9.54 percent out of 20,514 went extra innings.

I then discovered Smith's work with Retrosheet major league data. In Table 2 of his 2004 article entitled "Coming from Behind: Patterns of Scoring and Relation to Winning," Smith took data for 73 seasons (1901, 1904, 1909–10, 1912–13, 1918, 1936, 1938–42, and 1944–2003), and created a database of 1,129,558 innings in 122,906 games. 413 or 0.3 percent were ties. Because of darkness or weather, 1209 or 1.0 percent were official games taking less than 9 innings: 183 went 5 innings, 295 went 6, 384 went 7, and 347 went 8.

The number of ties and the number of official games lasting less than 9 innings are both significantly less relative to the 1870s and 1880s, both because starting times had advanced to earlier in the afternoon, and because a majority of games in these 73 seasons were played in ballparks with lights. Both factors allowed games to continue to a decision that back in the 1800s would have been called due to darkness. 5060 games went 10 innings, 2843 went 11, 1588 went 12, 881 went 13, 521 went 14, 268 went 15, 163 went 16, 88 went 17, 43 went 18, 25 went 19, 13 went 20, 8 went 21, 6 went 22, 2 went 23, 2 went 24, and 2 went 25. The record-length 26-inning Dodgers at Braves game in 1920 occurred in a year that was not included in Smith's database. 11,513 or 9.37 percent out of 122,906 went into extra innings.

This database spans both the period before lights and the period after lights, so it would be inappropriate to use the 9.37 percent figure to predict the percentage of extra-inning games either before or after lights were installed in ballparks. To do this, we need to break down Smith's database year-by-year and make a judgment call on what year to use as the dividing point between the day-ball and night-ball eras.

This is a difficult judgment because lights were introduced into major league parks gradually from 1935 to 1948, were infrequently used at first, and were hardly ever used during World War II (1942–45). Night games were introduced in 1935 by the Reds; in 1938 by the Dodgers; in 1939 by the Athletics, Phillies, Indians, and White Sox; in 1940 by the Giants, Browns, Pirates, and Cardinals; in 1941 by the Senators; in 1946 by the Braves and Yankees; in 1947 by the Red Sox, and in 1948 by the Tigers. The Cubs did not introduce night games until 1988. I chose to use 1948 as the dividing line and as the last year of the day-ball era, with the night-ball era beginning in 1949.

Smith's data was thus broken down into two eras. During the day-ball era through 1948, there are 18 seasons, with 2005 extra-inning games of a total of 21,884 games, or 9.16 percent extra-inning games. Lowest data-points are 7.1 percent in 1948 and 7.2 percent in 1901. Highest data-points are 12.3 percent in 1918 and 11.9 percent in 1942. This is considerably higher than 5.68 percent for 1871–89. The difference can be attributed to the fact games started later in the 1800s than in the 1900s. In the 1800s, games usually started at 4 P.M., whereas starting times in the 1900s gradually moved up from 4 P.M., at first to 3 P.M., and then later on to 2 P.M. and 1 P.M.

The night-ball era for Smith's data extends 1949–2003. There are 55 seasons, with 9508 extra-inning games of a total of 101,022 games, or 9.41 percent extra-inning games. Lowest data-points are 7.9 percent in 1950 and again in 1999. Highest data-points are 13.1 percent in 1957 and 11.3 percent in 1960. This compares very well with the 9.54 percent I had for 1980–89.

Based on this data, it seems clear that night ball did not make a very big difference in the number of extra-inning games after all! What made the difference was moving starting times up from 4 P.M. to 3 P.M. and then to 2 P.M. and then to 1 P.M., eliminating most of the chances a game would be called due to darkness before it had the opportunity to go into extra innings.

An interesting fact is the average for extra-inning games is going down. The number of extra-inning games has been declining steadily since the 1960s when it was at 9.9 percent: 1970s 9.7 percent, 1980s 9.7 percent, 1990s 9.0 percent, 2000s 8.2 percent. This decline in extra-inning games can probably be attributed to the fact we have been having significantly higher-scoring games since the early 1980s.

Based on this research, the best empirical estimate for the percentage of extra-inning games is: 5.68 percent in the 1800s, 9.17 percent in the 1900s through 1948 day-ball era when all or most games were played in daytime, and 9.41 percent during the night-ball era from 1949 through the present. The best theoretical estimate, given by our mathematical model, is that 10.3 percent of all games should go into extra innings.

Visiting Team Advantage in Marathon-Land?

One of the most surprising facts about marathon games is that a statistically significant majority have been won by the visiting team. There have been 71 ties, and for 155 of the games, it is unclear whether the visitor or home team won, either because the game was played at a neutral site or because we do not know where the game was played. In the remaining 314 games, 174 or 55 percent were won by the visiting team, and only 140 by the home team. There seems to be a hidden "visiting team advantage" lurking somewhere in the Kingdom of Marathon Base-ball.

In the major leagues, the home team wins 54 percent of the time. But in extra-inning contests, the home team only wins 52 percent of the time. And in extra-inning games lasting 20 or more innings, the home team advantage disappears altogether and home teams win only 45 percent of the time.

What actually happens is that the home team advantage begins to slip away increasingly from the 9th inning to the 15th inning, when a visiting team advantage begins to assert itself increasingly as games move beyond the 15th inning. Why does the advantage for the home team begin to dissipate as games move further into extra innings, disappear altogether at the 15-inning point, and then actually shift to the visiting team in a big way, for marathons lasting 20 or more innings? The answer is elusive.

That the visiting team wins 55 percent of all marathons needs to be considered in light of Dave Smith's aforementioned study. Smith asserts, based on data from 73 major league seasons, that the home team scores more than the visiting team in each of the first 8 innings, but visiting teams score more than the home team in the ninth inning and in each extra inning, since as soon as the home team scores enough to win in these innings, the game is over and the home team stops batting with less than three outs.

Although visiting teams score more runs per inning than home teams from the ninth inning on, Smith is not implying visiting teams win more often than do home teams. But my finding that 55 percent of marathons lasting 20 innings or more are won by the visiting team and only 45 percent are won by the home team is a statistically significant finding.

If we break down over time, by decade, this tendency for visiting teams to win 55 percent of marathons lasting 20 or more innings, we can see if there is a trend, although we should expect some random fluctuations. Here are the results of this analysis:

1860s and earlier:	no sample
1870s	visiting team wins 100% of time (sample size too small to be meaningful)
1880s	no sample
1890s	visiting team wins 0% of the time (sample size too small to be meaningful)
1900s	visiting team wins 64% of the time
1910s	visiting team wins 58% of the time
1920s	visiting team wins 74% of the time
1930s	visiting team wins 39% of the time
1940s	visiting team wins 44% of the time
1950s	visiting team wins 42% of the time
1960s	visiting team wins 57% of the time
1970s	visiting team wins 55% of the time
1980s	visiting team wins 52% of the time
1990s	visiting team wins 40% of the time
2000s	visiting team wins 64% of the time
Overall	visiting team wins 55% of the time

As expected, there are random fluctuations. Home teams win more often in the 1930s, 1940s, 1950s, and 1990s. But there is no trend indicating either that this phenomenon is accelerating or decelerating. There were significantly more marathons lasting 20 or more innings in the 1900s and 1910s than in any other decades, probably because those two decades saw the high point in town ball played in small towns. This was the heyday of baseball, when there were more teams and more games being played than in any other decades.

Over a period of almost 150 years, there has been a consistent tendency indicating that visiting teams consistently win marathons lasting 20 or more innings significantly (10 percent) more often than home teams.

The evidence suggests that this tendency has little or anything to do with causes which have changed the game over the decades, such as increased usage of specialized relief pitchers.

My hypothesis is that visiting teams, not knowing how many runs they need to score to win, score as many as they can, while home teams, knowing how many runs they need to score to tie, limit their strategies to scoring only enough runs as they need to tie. This is my conjecture as to why visiting teams win 10 percent (55 percent vs. 45 percent) more often than do home teams in marathons lasting 20 or more innings.

Longest Rain Delay: 8 Hours 12 Minutes

If one loves long marathon baseball games lasting 20 or more innings, what better to accompany them than a long, long rain delay! The most time due to rain delays in a Massachusetts Rules marathon was 2 hours 50 minutes, plus some, in the 172-inning 1860 game cited earlier. The game endured two delays in the bottom of the 13th, 20 minutes September 25 and 2 hours 30 minutes September 26. Then there were two more delays of unknown duration on October 4 and 5, both in the top of the 173rd, which was never played.

The longest rain delay to ever accompany a non-Massachusetts Rules marathon was 2 hours in the top of the 13th on May 15, 1981, at Disch-Falk Field in Austin. The Texas Longhorns defeated the Rice Owls 7–6 in 20 innings in a game suspended due to the long rain delay at 1:15 A.M., and then finished the next afternoon. The second longest rain delay in a marathon was 1 hour 46 minutes in the bottom of the 11th September 7, 1990, at Greer Stadium in Nashville. The Omaha Royals defeated the Nashville Sounds 8–7 in 20 innings at 3:50 A.M. Old Comiskey saw the longest rain delay in a major league marathon, as the top of the 14th was delayed 17 minutes in a 21-inning game May 26, 1973.

Two marathons were delayed for reasons other than rain. At San Antonio, the April 29, 1960, 24-inning game vs. Rio Grande Valley was delayed by a scoreboard fire in the bottom of the 23rd. And the April 18, 1981, start of the epic 33-inning Rochester at Pawtucket struggle was delayed for a half hour by power failure in the outfield lights.

Old Comiskey holds the record for the longest major league rain delay ever—seven hours 23 minutes on August 12, 1990. The game vs. the Rangers never even got started. It was finally called off at 8:58 P.M., and then played five days later on August 17 in Texas. The minor league record is held by Yogi Berra Stadium in Little Falls, New Jersey, where the start of the August 14, 2000, Northern League game was delayed by rain for seven hours 6 minutes. The Catskill Cougars eventually downed the New Jersey Jackals 6–1, finishing up at 11:06 P.M.

Yankee Stadium holds the record for the most controversial rain delay in history. On July 27, 1951, the White Sox played the Yankees before 50,125 fans in the middle of a heated pennant race between the two clubs. With the Yankees leading 3–1 and rain clouds swirling in the sky above the Bronx, the White Sox came to bat in the top of the ninth. After the first two batters reached base on a single and a walk, it began to rain and Yankee third baseman Gil McDougald went to the mound to confer with pitcher Tom Morgan.

Umpire Bill McGowan ejected McDougald for delaying the game, and White Sox manager Paul Richards protested the game because of Yankee delaying tactics. Yankee manager Casey Stengel then also protested the game, saying McDougald's ejection was unwarranted. A single narrowed the Yankee lead to 3–2, and then a 26-minute rain delay was called by the umpires from 10:49 P.M. to 11:15 P.M. When the game resumed, the Yankees made three pitching changes but the White Sox managed to take a lead 4–3 on a bases-loaded two-run single before another rain delay was called at 11:30 P.M. After a 62-minute wait, the umpires called the game, with the final score reverting to the score at the end of the final completed inning, giving the Yankees a 3–1 victory. The White Sox appeal of the game was denied, and the White Sox fans were less than pleased.

The longest rain delay ever recorded occurred during the NCAA tournament at MacKenzie Field, Holyoke, Massachusetts on May 24, 1978. In the top of the seventh, with the Delaware Blue Hens leading the Harvard Crimson 1–0, the umps waited eight hours twelve minutes, from 1:50 P.M. until 10:02 P.M., before calling the game off.

Empirical Results for Major League Marathons

Since major league baseball began in 1871, and continuing through 2005, there were 46 regular season major league marathons lasting 20 or more innings out of a total of 199,906 games played: 26 in the NL, 18 in the AL, one in the Negro National League, and one in the Negro American League. The empirical statistical probability therefore that a major league game will take 20 or more innings is $46 / 199,906 = 1 / 4346$, or 0.02301 percent. This indicates a marathon should take place roughly every 4346 games.

Picking a random year, 2005, with each of 30 teams playing 81 home games, there were 2430 regular season games, plus 30 (it could have been anywhere from 24 to 41) post-season games, so there were 2460 games. Assuming 2460 major league games per season, a major league marathon taking 20 or more innings can empirically be expected to come along roughly every $4346 / 2460 = 1.77$ seasons. So we should empirically expect a marathon in the future a little more often than once every other season.

What have we actually experienced recently in the major leagues? Over the past 28 years, from 1981 through 2008, we have three separate eras. For 1981 through 1992, before the Rockies and Marlins existed, we should have expected a marathon to occur every 2.0 seasons; for 1993–96, before the Diamondbacks and Rays existed, it was every 1.9 seasons; and since 1997, it has been every 1.7 seasons. Over the entire past 28 years, the weighted average is 1.8, so we should expect $28 / 1.8 = 15$ marathons, but we have had only 12.

Extra-Inning and Marathon Scoring Records

For 47 years, the highest scoring major league extra-inning game was the 18-inning Athletics 18–17 win over the Indians in Cleveland July 10, 1932, when Jack Burnett got nine hits and Eddie Rommel relieved in the 2nd for the A's and went the rest of the way for the win, still the longest-ever relief effort in major league history. On May 17, 1979, however, the 10-inning Phillies 23–22 win over the Cubs at Wrigley Field broke that record.

The most runs scored by both teams in extra innings of a major league game is 13, both in games won by New York NL teams. On June 15, 1929, at Forbes Field, the Giants and Pirates were tied at 11 after 9 innings, both scored one in the 11th, then the Giants scored 8 in the 14th while the Pirates only scored 3. Final score: New York 20 Pittsburgh 15. On July 4, 1985, at Atlanta Stadium, the Mets and Braves were tied at 8 after 9 innings, both scored two in the 13th, and both scored one in the 18th. Then the Mets scored 5 in the 19th, while the Braves scored only 2. Final score: New York 16 Atlanta 13 at 3:55 A.M. The post-game Fourth of July fireworks show was faithfully carried live back to New York viewers from 4:01 A.M. to 4:12 A.M. by the Mets WOR-TV broadcast team, which included Tim McCarver, who was no doubt recalling his lack of lightning speed at 3:15 A.M. in Philadelphia a decade before on September 25, 1975, which allowed Rusty Staub of the Mets to throw him out at the plate, thus ending another game that had been threatening to go until dawn!

The Vanorsdale Athletic Club and the Shalala Athletic Club scored the most combined number of runs in one extra inning July 25, 1934, in Connellsville, Pennsylvania when Shalala scored 5 in the top of the 25th, and Vanorsdale scored 7 in the bottom of the 25th to win 13–11.

The PCL Edmonton Trappers scored the most runs ever in one extra inning by one team in a minor league game July 27, 2004, in Memphis, when they defeated the Redbirds 15–3 with 12 runs in the 12th. The Rangers scored the most runs ever in one extra inning by one team in a major league game July 3, 1983, in Oakland, when they defeated the A's 16–4 with 12 runs in the 15th. One hundred years earlier, on September 6, 1883, the Cubs scored the most runs ever in one inning in a major league game when they scored 18 in the 7th inning to defeat Detroit 18–0. Joseph City High School of Arizona scored 28 runs in one inning while defeating Ash Fork High School 46–4 April 15, 1974.

The highest scoring doubleheaders saw 54 runs scored, on August 21, 1894, as the Beaneaters (later named the Braves) defeated the Reds in Boston 18–3 and 25–8, and July 4, 1939, when the Red Sox defeated the A's in Philadelphia 17–7 and 18–12.

The highest scoring major league marathon is the 21-inning Padres 11–8 win over the Expos in Montreal May 21, 1977. The record for the highest scoring minor league marathon was set July 8, 1938, when the visiting Fulton Eagles of the Kitty (Kentucky-Illinois-Tennessee) League scored five in the 20th to defeat the Paducah Indians 14–9 at Hook Park.

The record for the highest scoring “other” category marathon was set August 1, 1932, when the Knights of Pythias’s A Team and the K of P’s B Team battled through 23 innings to a 19–19 tie at the Schultheiss Farm in Elyria, Ohio.

Of course we could also count games played under Massachusetts Rules. Then our highest scoring marathon would be Medway’s 100–78 victory over Upton in Ashland, Massachusetts July 28–29, 1859. But if we’re going to count that game, we might as well count planned marathons too. So the record for highest scoring marathon is the African Gray Birds’ 127–110 victory over the Red-Eyed Nites in the Women’s Marathon 24 Hours for Africa in Tucson October 18–19, 2003.

Databases on Run Production Per Inning

To predict how many games will go into extra innings, and how many extra innings they will last, we first have to determine how many runs are scored in each inning. I went through every available box score for all games taking 20 or more innings, and recorded the number of runs scored in the 10th inning, 11th, 12th, etc. through the 45th inning. This created a database of 5298 innings in 206 games. I did the same for every major league extra-inning game played during the 1980s. This created an additional database of 8952 innings in 1957 games.

I then discovered Dave Smith’s much larger database, mentioned earlier, with 1,129,558 innings in 122,906 games. It soon became obvious Smith’s database is much more thorough than mine for innings 1–19. However, since my database on 20 and more inning games is 100 percent complete for innings 20–45 and Smith’s is not, it is also obvious my database for innings 20–45 is much more thorough than Smith’s.

We now have two valuable databases. In the first, we have a complete database for all games lasting 20 or more innings. In this database, one sees what one would expect intuitively. Run production in marathons going 20 or more innings is very low in innings 10–19, which is why these games tend to stay tied and last until at least the 20th inning. The second database, consisting of Smith’s data for innings 1–19 and my database for innings 20–45, is the best available database to predict how many runs teams will score in any given inning. Here are the two databases:

Runs scored per inning for all games, tabulated by inning for innings 1–45, based on Smith’s major league data for innings 1–19 and Lowry’s data for innings 20–45:

Parts of this database are less valid than others simply because of a lower number of existing data-points. Smith's database has a total of 2,259,116 datapoints. It starts with 245,812 inning data-points (representing 122,906 games) in the first inning and remains there through the fifth inning. As games start to get called due to weather and darkness, the number of data-points falls gradually to 243,394 in the ninth inning. That number then falls off dramatically to 23,026 in the tenth inning, 12,906 in the eleventh, etc. By the time it gets to the 19th inning, it has fallen to only 116 datapoints.

My database on all games that have lasted 20 or more innings which have a box score has a total of 5298 datapoints. It starts with 412 inning data-points (representing all 206 games lasting 20 or more innings for which box scores exist) in the tenth inning and remains there through the 20th inning. Then it falls off to 254 data-points in the 21st inning, and by the 28th it is down to only 18 data-points, meaning that we only have box scores for 9 games, or 18 inning data-points, which have gone 28 or more innings.

As the Smith data for runs per inning approaches inning 20, and as the Lowry data approaches inning 30, we begin to see significantly higher variability in runs per inning, simply due to a smaller number of data-points. The Smith data shows 0.384 in the 17th inning, then plummets down an unrealistic 27 percent to 0.302 in the 18th, and then zooms up an unrealistic 46 percent to 0.440 in the 19th. Similarly, the Lowry data shows 0.156 in the 26th inning, then zooms up an unrealistic 60 percent to 0.250 in the 27th, and then plummets down an unrealistic 56 percent to 0.111 in the 28th. However, this is the very best database available. For innings 20–45 it is 100 percent complete data, based on every single box score in existence for games lasting 20 or more innings.

The data shows that run production is 0.000 for innings 34 and 36–44 because we have no box scores showing any team ever scoring in those innings. Only six teams have ever played a 36th inning; and two of those teams played a game with no existing box score. Only two teams have ever played innings 37 through 45.

Six very interesting facts arise out of these two databases.

First, run production is significantly higher in the first inning than in any other inning. Whereas teams score 0.487 runs per average inning, the visiting team scores 0.514 and the home team scores 0.607 runs in the first inning. Higher scoring in the first inning is expected because this is the only inning during a game in which teams are assured their best batters, at the top of the order, will all bat together.

Second, the often cited “home field advantage” is true for innings 1–8, with the home team scoring an average of 0.048 runs more per inning than the visiting team. As cited above, this home field advantage is by far most prominent in the first inning, when the home team scores on average 0.093 runs more than the visiting team.

Third, what appears to be a “visiting team advantage” exists from the ninth inning on, with the home team scoring an average of 0.051 runs less than the visiting team in innings 9–45. After some reflection, this is reasonable because after the home team scores enough runs to win the game from the bottom of the ninth inning on, the game is over and so the home team stops batting. An interesting variation shows that this difference is much less in the 9th inning (0.035 runs) than in innings 10–45 (0.124 runs). Whereas in extra innings, the teams are always tied at the start of the inning, things are different in the 9th inning since the home team may be way behind at the start of the inning and so therefore may score many runs to catch up before winning in the bottom of the 9th.

Fourth, run production is much lower in extra innings than in innings 1–9. This makes sense because extra-inning games are usually low scoring contests. High scoring games rarely go into extra innings, whereas there are many 1–0 and 2–1 extra-inning games. It is statistically much less likely for the Philadelphia Athletics 49–33 NA victory over the Troy Haymakers June 28, 1871 (highest scoring major league game ever), or the Cubs 26–23 win over the Phillies August 25, 1922 (highest scoring NL game ever), or the Red Sox 22–14 win over the Athletics June 29, 1950 (highest scoring AL game ever), to remain tied and go into extra innings.

Fifth, my data limited to only games going 20 or more innings shows dramatically lower run production in innings 10–19 than does Smith's data based on all games. For example, Smith's data shows runs per inning of 0.392 in the 15th inning, vs. my data showing 0.029 in the 15th. Smith's data for innings 10 and 12–17 is more than ten times higher than my data for these same innings. Smith's data averages out to 0.387 runs per inning for innings 10–19. My data, on the other hand, averages out to only 0.026 runs per inning for innings 10–19. We can conclude marathons lasting 20 or more innings produce 93 percent fewer runs during innings 10–19 than do extra-inning games in general. In other words, games that last 20 or more innings are most often very low scoring games. If many runs are scored, the game probably will not remain tied very long, and will therefore probably not last 20 or more innings.

Sixth, other than higher scoring in the first inning, all scoring variations, both between visiting and home teams, and also between different innings, are so minor they may be ignored statistically in terms of creating a mathematical model to predict how long games will last. An average game involves each team scoring 0.487 runs per inning. Assuming the visiting and home teams each win roughly half the time, there will be an average of 8.75 innings (17.5 half-innings) per game in a game that does not go into extra innings, or a total of $0.487 \times 17.5 = 8.52$ runs per game. Variations such as the home team scoring 0.048 more runs per inning in innings 1–8, while interesting, are statistically insignificant. When evaluating the possibility of whether an average game, involving between 8 and 9 runs, will go into extra innings, this 0.048 runs per inning is only $0.048 / 8.52 = 0.0056$, a statistically irrelevant half of one percent of the total runs in the game.

Mathematical Model of Extra Innings

Based upon this data, Dr. Darren Glass, Professor of Mathematics at Gettysburg College, and I have constructed a mathematical theory of extra innings. We begin by assuming there are no meaningful statistical differences between offensive production from the tenth inning forward in an extra-inning game. Our assumption that offensive production in any given inning, starting with the 10th, is independent of offensive production in any other inning allows us to use the statistical definition of independent events. If two events are statistically independent, then the probability of both occurring is equal to the probability of one event occurring times the probability of the other event occurring.

To establish our model, we made some definitions. Let n = the number of innings in an extra-inning game. Let $P(n)$ = the Probability an extra-inning game will last n innings. Let T = the probability a game is Tied after 9 innings = the probability a game will go into extra innings.

We previously determined empirically that T was 5.68 percent in the 1800s, 9.17 percent in 1900–48, and 9.41 percent in 1949–2004. Our theoretical model predicts this should be 10.3 percent. There are most likely several factors contributing to this small discrepancy between our predicted theoretical value and the actual empirical data. The biggest factor is that to build our model we assumed both teams are average, whereas in the real world one team may be above average and the other team may be below average, which would decrease the probability of a game going into extra innings, perhaps from our estimated 10.3 percent to the current real-world 9.4 percent. For predictions regarding future games, we use $T = 0.103$.

Let k = the probability both teams will score the same number of runs in one inning. This is where we use the extensive databases mentioned earlier. My database results in the value of k being 0.5841. We checked additional databases (see Bibliography) from which it is possible to obtain an empirical value for k , including G.R. Lindsey's 0.5696 for all innings in 1958, Lindsey's 0.5895 for just extra innings in 1958, Lindsey's 0.5552 for all innings in 1959, Lindsey's

0.5479 for just extra innings in 1959, and Kevin Woolner's 0.5606 for 1980–98.

Having made the required definitions, now let's separate an extra-inning baseball game into three separate events. The First part is the beginning, or first nine innings. The Second part is the middle, from the tenth inning through the next-to-the-last inning, the $(n-1)$ th inning. The Third part is the last inning, the n th inning. Since these three events are statistically independent, $P(n)$ = the probability of a game going n innings will be the probability of the first part occurring times the probability of the second part occurring times the probability of the third part occurring.

The probability of the first part of a future game occurring, as we have already discussed, is empirically $T = 0.0941$, and theoretically $T = 0.103$. For predictions regarding future games, we use $T = 0.103$.

The probability of the second part of the game occurring is k , the probability both teams will score the same number of runs in one inning, times itself for as many times as there are innings in the middle part of the game, from the tenth inning through the $(n-1)$ th inning. The number of innings in this middle part of the game is $(n-1) - 9 = (n-10)$. We have to multiply k times itself $(n-10)$ times, so the probability of the second part of the game occurring is $k^{(n-10)}$.

The probability of the third part of the game occurring is trickier than the previous two probabilities. If k = the probability both teams score the same number of runs in an inning, then $(1-k)$ has to be the probability both teams do Not score the same number of runs in an inning, because the combined probability that they do and they do Not score the same number of runs in an inning must add up to one. Now all we need to do to get our theoretical model is to string together the three different probabilities of our three independent events, and multiply them together:

$$P(n) = T k^{(n-10)} (1-k).$$

Looking at our model, it is important to do sensitivity analysis. If k increases, $P(n)$ also increases. As the probability increases that both teams score the same number of runs in the same inning, extra-inning games tend to go longer. That makes sense. How does changing k change the possibility a game will go exactly 20 innings? Let's look at the different possible values for k cited above. The lowest value for k cited was 0.5479, using Lindsey's work on extra-inning games in 1959. Using this value for k , $P(20)$ = the probability of a game going 20 innings, is 0.011 percent. The highest value for k cited was 0.5895, using Lindsey's work on extra-inning games in 1958. Using this value for k , $P(20)$ = the probability of a game going 20 innings, is 0.021 percent, or double the probability for the lowest value of k . So we need to be very careful to get the correct value of k , since the probability of a game going n number of innings is very sensitive to the value of k . This is why I took all the time to gather all the data on runs scored per inning.

Getting the correct value of k is crucial to success of our model. Another important example of sensitivity analysis for the value of k is examining how k varies as offensive strength changes. Data gathered by Woolner, as well as common sense, suggests offensive powerhouse teams have a different scoring distribution than teams scoring few runs. One of the key features of our model is that it takes as an input the average number of runs per inning that each team scores. As we would expect, the model agrees with Woolner's data showing the probability that two teams score the same number of runs per inning goes down as offensive production increases, since one team is more likely to have a "breakout" inning and score a high number of runs. This also indicates the number of extra-inning games and their lengths should increase during eras when scoring is low, such as the Dead Ball Era of 1900–19, which did in fact happen.

If we assume teams are of equal offensive strength, the value of k varies from 0.373 when both teams score 1.0 run per inning, to 0.553 when both teams score 0.5 runs per inning, up to 0.866 when both teams score only 0.1 runs per inning. From now on, it will be assumed both teams score 0.487 runs per inning, based on Smith's data, the best available empirical data. This choice yields a value of k of 0.5559.

Predictions Based on the Mathematical Model

Our theoretical model can be used to predict several things. First, it predicts the theoretical probability a game will take x number of innings to play. What are the odds a game will go exactly 26 innings, or it will go 26 or more innings? Second, it predicts the theoretical probability a game of x number of innings will take place in the next y number of years. Does a 26-inning major league game come along every 50 years, or every 100 years, or how often? What is the probability of a record-breaking 27-inning major league game taking place in the next 25 years? What are the odds of a record-breaking 34-inning minor league game taking place before 2050?

To accomplish this task, we have to make some decisions. Do we count ties, fake ties, thrown out games, forfeits, playoffs, World Series? I have done so. How many major league games have ever been played? I have calculated this number through 2005 as 1,418,906. This includes all games in the Negro Leagues, which I count as major leagues. How many minor league games have ever been played? Using the Sumner and Johnson/Wolff books as my guideline (see Bibliography), I have calculated this number from 1877, the first year of minor league play, through 2005 as 1,418,902. How many games in the "other" category have been played, including school games, amateur games, international games, and women's games? I have estimated this number as ten times the number of minor league games, or 14,189,020.

Thus, my estimate of the total number of baseball games ever played through 2005, at all levels and at all locations world-wide, is $199,906 + 1,418,902 + 14,189,020 = 15,807,828$. It should be noted many "other" category games are scheduled for only 6 or 7 innings, and some minor league games are scheduled for only 7 innings. Interestingly, the minimum number of innings for a game to be "official," whether scheduled for 6, or 7, or 9 innings, seems to have always been $4\frac{1}{2}$ or 5, with the losing team required to have had at least five innings in which to bat.

I believe 100 percent of all major league marathons taking 20 or more innings have been discovered. The only possible exception to this may be that there could be one or more Negro League marathons yet to be discovered. For the purposes of this research, however, I assume all major league marathons have been found.

This is definitely Not the case for games in the minor leagues and the "other" category. For minor league games, despite intensive research over a 46-year period, I have perhaps found only 50 percent of the minor league marathons which have actually been played, due to incomplete and missing league records. And for the "other" category, due to lack of media coverage, I have perhaps found only 5 percent. Therefore, the empirical statistical probabilities for marathons developed in this article for all games at all levels are based on major league data, which is the only data which is complete.

Assuming the percentage of marathons in the majors, minors, and "other" categories is the same, which is a reasonable assumption, we can estimate the number of marathons missing from my research. A good estimate of the number of minor league marathons would be 1,418,902 times 0.02301 percent, the percentage of such games in the majors, or 326. Since I have only found 184, that means I may be missing 142 minor league marathons. This would indicate I have found 56 percent of minor league marathons, and am still missing 44 percent.

Certain aspects of baseball strategy affect the length of an extra-inning game. These aspects include such managerial strategies as going for a tie at home and a win on the road, frequency of using relief pitchers, cold vs. warm weather which can depress or elevate the average of 0.487 runs scored per inning, temperatures getting colder and colder as a night game progresses, and eras such as the Dead Ball Era when offensive production has been significantly different.

Using our model, we have calculated the theoretical chances of major league games going x innings. The fit between our theoretical data and actual empirical data is very good. For example, our theoretical model predicts the probability of a major league game going exactly 10 innings should be 4.57 percent; actual data from 1871–2005 indicates it is actually 4.12 percent. Our model has predicted reality to within 0.45 percent, which is good.

Similarly, our model predicts the probability of a major league game going 16 innings to be 0.135 percent; actual data shows it is actually 0.133 percent. Our model has predicted reality to within 0.002 percent, which is very good. Our model predicts the probability of a major league game going 22 innings to be 0.00398 percent; actual data shows it is actually 0.00405 percent. The fit between our model and the real world is surprisingly good! Now let us look at our theoretical probabilities of a major league game going x innings as compared to actual empirical data.

On the following page are the statistical probabilities that any given major league game will take 10 innings, 11 innings, etc. all the way up to 50 innings. The empirical data is based on the 199,906 major league games played 1871–2005. It is assumed that each team will score 0.487 runs per half inning, and that the value of k , or the probability that both teams will score the same number of runs in any given inning, is 0.5559, or 55.59 percent.

Another method of evaluating how closely our theoretical model corresponds to empirical data is to determine T and k from the empirical data of how many major league games have gone x innings. Our formula for $P(n)$ is a negative binomial distribution. Summing up the actual empirical probabilities for games going into extra innings gives us $T = 9.36$ percent, rather than the 9.41 percent we used above.

The mean number of extra innings from the empirical data is 2.26623 (meaning a game of 11.26623 innings). In a negative binomial distribution, the mean $= 1/(1-k)$. Solving this equation for k gives us $k = 0.5587$ rather than the 0.5559 we used above.

Using $T = 9.36$ percent and $k = 55.87$ percent, we can calculate the fitted probabilities. These are also shown below. The fit between these fitted probabilities and empirical data is significantly better than the fit between our theoretical probabilities and the empirical data. For example, if we compare the 4.12 percent fitted probability for 10-inning games to the actual 4.13 percent experienced in the major leagues from 1871 to 2005, our model has predicted reality to within 0.01 percent, which is very close.

Conclusions on the Relative "Rarity" of Record-Long Games

So how "rare" are record-long marathons: Boston's 26 innings in the major league category set in 1920, Pawtucket's 33 innings in the minor league category set in 1981, and Mito, Japan's 45 innings in the "other" category (schools/amateur/international/women) set in 1983? Our theoretical model predicts that the 26-inning major league record game is not as rare as empirical data would indicate, but that the 33-inning minor league record game and 45-inning "other" category record game are significantly more rare than empirical data would indicate.

According to our theoretical model for the period 1871, the beginning of the major leagues, through 2005, we should expect 57 major league marathons for the period. In fact, there were only 46.

We should expect a 50 percent chance to experience a major league game of 20 or more innings in any given season. We should expect 0.939 major league games, or almost one, to have gone 27 or more innings by now. In fact, we have not yet had such a game. We should expect a 10.9 percent chance to see a major league game of 27 innings or more in any given decade. Since we have been waiting almost fourteen decades now, it is not at all unrealistic to expect we could very soon have a major league game last 27 or more innings. So the 26-inning Boston game may be NOT SO rare. So far, so good. Our model is realistic, and fairly consistent with empirical data.

We should expect 6.68 minor league games to have gone 27 or more innings. In fact, we have had six such games, further indication our model is doing a good job of predicting reality. We should expect 0.087 minor league games to have gone 33 innings. In fact, we have had one such game, which means our actual count is $1 / 0.087 = 11.5$ times the expected count. So the 33-inning Rochester at Pawtucket game may be VERY rare indeed.

We should expect a 99.3 percent chance we will have a minor league marathon of 20 or more innings in any given season, a 0.13 percent chance we will have a minor league game of 34 or more innings in any given season, a 1.32 percent chance of seeing a minor league game of 34 innings or more in any given decade, and a 9.4 percent chance of seeing a minor league game of 34 innings or more in 75 years.

We should expect 0.000954 "other" category games to have gone 45 innings. In fact, we have had one game of 45 or more innings, which means our actual count of one is $1 / 0.000954 = 1048$ times the expected count. We should expect 0.00000366 "other" category games to last 45 or more innings in 75 years. So the 45-inning Mito game may be EXTREMELY rare indeed!

Our model allows us to estimate the probability of games lasting a certain number of innings or longer in each of our three categories. This is an alternative method, and perhaps a more easily understood way to express how "rare" are marathons of a certain length. Let's use this approach to compare relative probabilities of breaking the current records for major league, minor league, and "other" category games.

There is a 50 percent chance we will see a major league game break the record of 26 innings, and go 27 innings or more in the next 60 years. There is a 95 percent chance we will see a major league game go 27 innings or more in the next 260 seasons. So the 26-inning major league record set in Boston in 1920, while rare, is not so rare that we should not expect to see it possibly broken some day soon.

There is a 50 percent chance we will see a minor league game break the record of 33 innings, and go 34 innings or longer in the next 523 years. There is a 95 percent chance we will see a minor league game go 34 innings or more in the next 2257 years. So the 33-inning minor league record set in Pawtucket in 1981 may be very rare, and although it could be broken at any time, we should not expect to see it broken anytime soon.

There is a 50 percent chance we will see an “other” category game break the record of 45 innings, and go 46 innings or more in the next 59,975 years. There is a 95 percent chance we will see an “other” category game go 46 innings or more in the next 259,207 years, or just two-thirds the age of mankind (about 300,000 years old). So the 45-inning “other” category record set in Mito, Japan in 1983, seems to be extremely rare indeed. Although it could be broken at any time, it seems very conceivable it may never be broken.

Summary

As long as there is a “hot stove league,” baseball fans will argue whether somewhere back in the murky uncharted depths of undocumented baseball history there may perhaps be a game that lasted longer than the 45-inning game in Mito, Japan, which is the longest baseball game by innings ever played, excluding Massachusetts Rules and planned marathon games.

Could I have spent 46 years searching for the longest game by innings, and missed one lasting more than 45 innings? I don't think so, but anything is possible. It took me 40 years 11 months of searching before July 23, 2004, which is when, thanks to Mr. Masaru “Massy” Ikei of Yokohama, Japan, I found the 45-inning game in Mito. So who is to say a game longer than 45 innings may not be found in some dusty archive next month?

Some day in the future, a major league game will probably break the 26-inning barrier set on May 1, 1920, by the Dodgers and Braves at Braves Field in Boston. And some other day, perhaps in the far future, a minor league game may break the 33-inning record set on April 18 and June 23, 1981, by the Red Wings and Paw Sox in Pawtucket's McCoy Stadium.

But will a game ever break the 45-inning record set September 20, 1983, in Mito, Japan by Light Manufacturing and Tanaka Hospital? Just think about that: 45 innings! That's five full regular-length 9-inning games. Only time will tell.

45 Innings (1)

Ibaraki-Mito Kenei (Prefectural) Kyujo (Stadium), Mito, Japan — 9/20/1983 — Amateur Industrial Emperor's Cup Nan-shiki Tournament — Tokyo Raito (Light) Kogyo (Manufacturing Company) 2 Miyazaki Tanaka Byouin (Hospital) 1 in 8:19, umpire snack break delay 0:06 top 26th, players refused 0:30 break top 26th — 100 fans at end — finished at 5:15 P.M.

37 to 44 Innings (0)

No game, thus far, has been identified as having gone more than 36 but less than 45 innings.

36 Innings (2)

North End Grounds, Stoneham, Massachusetts — 8/28/1880 — Zouaves 21 Benecia Boys 15 — 350 fans.

Recreation Park (I), Columbus, Ohio — 7/5/1907 — Amateur — Heintz Victors 2 Columbus Selects 2 in 3:50.

35 Innings (1)

Matsue Kyujyo (Stadium), Matsue, Japan — 7/20/1935 and 7/21/1935 — Japan Junior High School League — Oota Chu 2 Matsue Chu (later Matsue Kita Koto-gakko) 1 in 6:58, suspended after 4:48 and 23 innings.

34 Innings (0)

No game, thus far, has been identified as having gone 34 innings.

33 Innings (1)

McCoy Stadium, Pawtucket, Rhode Island — 4/18/1981 and 6/23/1981 — International League — power failure delay 0:30 at start, Pawtucket Paw Sox 3 Rochester Red Wings 2 in 8:25, suspended after 8:07 and 32 innings — 1740 fans, 150 fans Midnight, 100 fans top 21st, 60 fans 1 A.M., 27 fans top 27th, 19 fans at suspension, 5756 fans on 6/23 — suspended at 4:07 A.M. in the early morning of 4/19, dawn was at 5:00 A.M., finished at 6:18 P.M. on 6/23.

32 Innings (1)

Robert C. Wynn Field, Bradenton, Florida — 4/4/1987 — National Junior Collegiate Athletic Association — Hillsborough Community College Hawks 6 Manatee Community College Lancers 4 in 7:30 — 200 fans, 45 fans at end — finished at 9:30 P.M.

31 Innings (0)

No game, thus far, has been identified as having gone 31 innings.

30 Innings (3)

Van Wert, Ohio — ???/1904 — Amateur — Independent Team A with Hay of Kankakee pitching 3 Independent Team B 2.

Brookside Park, Cleveland, Ohio — 7/4/1907 — Amateur — Brooklyn Athletic Club 4 East End All Stars 1 in 5:50.

Tokyo, Japan — 8/30/1951 — Japan Junior High School League — Takefu Junior High School 0 Koshima Junior High School 0 in 5:45 — finished at 2:45 P.M.

29 Innings (4)

South Side Playgrounds, San Francisco, California — 10/12/1929 — Amateur — Regulars 9 Yannigans 8 in 5:00 — finished at 6:00 P.M.

Nishi-Kyogoku Kyujo (Stadium), Kyoto, Japan — 5/2/1959 — National Municipal League Championships — Nippon Shinyaku (New Pharmaceuticals) Company 2 Kurashiki Reiyon (Rayon) Company (later Kuraray Company) 1 in 6:14.

Al Lang Field (I), St. Petersburg, Florida — 6/14/1966 — Florida State League — Miami Marlins 4 St. Petersburg Cardinals 3 in 6:59 — 740 fans, 175 fans at end — finished at 2:29 A.M. in the early morning of 6/15.

Providence, Rhode Island — 6/17/1978 — Sunset League — Mooseup Valley 4 Sports Enterprises 2 in 6:45; 2nd game cancelled.

28 Innings (6)

Dorchester Franklin Field Diamond #5, Boston, Massachusetts — 6/8/1907 — Boston Grammar School League Championship Game — Henry L. Pierce Grammar School of Dorchester 4 Bennet Grammar School of Brighton 3 in 5:50 — finished at 3:50 P.M.

Columbus Avenue Grounds, Boston, Massachusetts — 9/11/1912 — Amateur — Willow Athletic Club 5 St. Philips' All-Stars 4 in 4:30 — finished at 2:30 P.M.

Delaware City, Ohio — 7/18/1914 — Amateur — Columbus Champions 1 Delaware Stars 0.

Korakuen Kyujyo (Stadium), Tokyo, Japan — 5/24/1942 — Japanese Federation — Taiyo 4 Nagoya 4 in 3:47 — finished at 6:27 P.M.

Tokyo Kyujyo (Stadium), Tokyo, Japan — 9/8/1951 — Industrial League — Marubeni Trading Company 2 Kajima Coal Company 1.

Vic Kapsner Memorial Park, Lastrup, Minnesota — 7/23/2005 — Minnesota Town Team League — Lastrup Lakers 1 Pierz Brewers 0 in 5:50 — 100 fans; 300 fans at end — finished at 7:25 P.M.

27 Innings (7)

Monarch Field, Houston, Texas — 8/??/1934 — Negro Texas-Oklahoma League — Austin Black Senators 3 Newgulf Black Buffs 2.

Managua, Nicaragua — late 1940s — Nicaraguan Second Division Amateur League — Manta Nica defeated Schumann in 6:13.

Estadio (Stadium) Domingo Santana, Leon, State of Guanajuato, Mexico — 7/17/1960 — Mexican Center League — Aguascalientes Tigres (Tigers) 5 Leon Diablos Rojos (Red Devils) 4.

Dunn Field, Elmira, New York — 5/8/1965 — Eastern League — Elmira Pioneers 2 Springfield Giants 1 in 6:24 — 386 fans, 400 fans at end — finished at 9:24 P.M.

Ube City Kyujyo (Stadium), Ube City, Japan — 5/13/1973 and 5/14/1973 — Japan High School League — Matsue Sho 2 Shimonoseki Sho 0, suspended after 18 innings.

MacArthur Stadium, Syracuse, New York — 6/19/1985 and 6/20/1985 and 6/21/1985 — International League — Pawtucket Paw Sox 3 Syracuse Chiefs 1 in 7:07, suspended after 5:36 and 22 innings, continued 6/20, rain delay 0:13 top 23rd, 2nd rain delay 0:50 bottom 24th, suspended again after 6:07 and 23½ innings, finally completed 6/21 — 1233 fans on 6/19; 200 fans when suspended after 22 innings; 3020 fans on 6/21 — suspended at 1:12 A.M. in the early morning of 6/20, suspended again at 9:05 P.M. on 6/20, finished at 7:31 P.M. on 6/21.

Burlington Athletic Stadium, Burlington, North Carolina — 6/24/1988 — Appalachian League — Bluefield Orioles 3 Burlington Indians 2 in 8:15 — 2204 fans, 84 fans at end — finished at 3:27 A.M. in the early morning of 6/25.

26 Innings (8)

Bloomington Grounds, Bloomington, Illinois — 5/31/1909 — Illinois-Indiana-Iowa (Three-I) League — Decatur Commodores 2 Bloomington Bloomers 1 in 4:20, rain delay 0:15 bottom 5th, 2nd game postponed — 1200 fans — finished at 6:35 P.M.

Athletic Park, Dixon, Illinois — 6/25/1909 — Semi-Pro League — Dixon Browns 3 Muscatine Independents 2 in 4:00 — 150 fans, 1000 fans at end — finished at 7:20 P.M.

Braves (later Nickerson) Field, Boston, Massachusetts — 5/1/1920 — National League — Robins (later Dodgers) 1 Braves 1 in 3:50 — 4000 fans — finished at 6:50 P.M.

Oakland City Park, Atlanta, Georgia — 7/26/1922 — Amateur — Oakland City 3 West End 2 — 500 fans.

Estadio (Stadium) Nacional (later Estadio Dennis Martinez), Managua, Nicaragua — 7/10/1949 — Nicaraguan First Division Amateur League — Navarro Cubs 4 Escuelas Internacionales 3 in 6:30 — finished at 4:30 P.M.

Belleville, Province of Ontario, Canada — 6/7/1975 — Ontario League — St. Catherine's Jackets 8 Belleville 2; 2nd game postponed — finished at 12:00 Midnight.

V.J. Keefe Stadium, San Antonio, Texas — 7/14/1988 and 7/16/1988 — Texas League — San Antonio Missions 1 Jackson Mets 0 in 7:23, suspended after 7:10 and 25 innings — 3792 fans on 7/14, 3260 fans on 7/16 — suspended at 2:15 A.M. in the early morning of 7/15.

KeySpan Park, Brooklyn, New York — 7/20/2006 — New York-Pennsylvania League — Oneonta Tigers 6 Brooklyn Cyclones 1 in 6:40 — 9004 fans; 190 fans at end — finished at 6:45 P.M.

Two

Longest Games by Time

I. HIGHLIGHTS AND CONCLUSIONS

On August 14, 2005, I attended my first marathon lasting more than six hours. The New York–Penn League Auburn Doubledays beat the Batavia Muckdogs 6–5 in 6:34 and 22 innings at Falcon Park in Auburn, NY. The game began July 7, and had been suspended after 6:02 and 20 innings.

Rewriting the Record Book

This research has uncovered two records in two different record books for time of game, albeit not of the type that the current work focuses upon.

Since 1916, the minor league record for shortest game by time had been recorded as 31 minutes for a Winston–Salem Twins at Asheville Tourists August 30, 1916, North Carolina State League game. But the record properly belongs to the 26-minute-long California League Los Angeles Angels vs. San Francisco Missons game played in December 1921.

And since 1919, the major league record for shortest full-length game by time had been recorded as the 51-minute game played as the first game of a double-header September 28, 1919, at the Polo Grounds between the Phillies and Giants. However, the record correctly belongs to the 50-minute game played more than eight years earlier, on April 12, 1911, also at the Polo Grounds between the Phillies and Giants.

How Many Marathons Are There?

A very rough guess for the number of baseball games that have ever been played is 16 million. So far, I have discovered only 140 games lasting six hours or more; and only 585 games lasting five hours or more. This indicates only one game in roughly every 114,000 takes six hours or more; and that only one game in roughly every 27,000 lasts five hours or more.

Longest Planned Marathon — 33:15 in Massapequa, NY

The longest that baseball has been continuously played in one game is 33 hours 15 minutes for a planned marathon at Burns Park in Massapequa, New York, May 24–25, 2008. The New York Giants defeated the Brooklyn Dodgers 155–135 in a 99-inning game sponsored by the Long Island Mountain Age 45 and Older Division of the Men's Senior League.

Longest Massachusetts Rules Marathon — 21:50 in Worcester, MA

A Nineteenth Century game played under Massachusetts Rules established a record for time of game which has never been equaled for a non-planned marathon. However, this record must be considered differently than other records, since one inning was defined not by three outs, but rather by one out.

On September 25, 1860, at the Agricultural Grounds in Worcester, Massachusetts, the Upton Excelsiors and Medway Unions played a game that lasted 172 innings over seven days! Play continued through September 26, 27, 28; October 1, 4, and 5 until finally it was called a complete game with the score Upton 50 Medway 29 after a time of game of 21 hours 50 minutes. Total elapsed time also set an all-time record of more than 25 hours, including a dinner delay, lunch delay, and four rain delays.

The game was to have continued until one team scored 100 runs, but after canceling a planned venue change to Springfield, Massachusetts, for October 1, and after rain prevented further play on October 4 and 5 in Worcester, it was called a complete game.

Mystery Marathon #1—10:00 in Piedras Negras, Mexico, at Black Rock

Our first “mystery” is the 10-hour long July 18, 1926, game played in Piedras Negras, Mexico. This is the longest time of game ever for a “normal” game, that is, not a planned marathon, and not a Massachusetts Rules game. The July 20, 1926, Eagle Pass Guide (TX) states that the San Luisito team from Eagle Pass defeated Piedras Negras 29–19 Sunday in a “scrap” which began at 9:00 A.M. and was called due to darkness in the sixth inning at 7:00 P.M. The July 24 San Antonio Express (TX) and the July 25 Lima Sunday News (OH) say the game lasted from 9:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M., and San Luista defeated Piedras Legras Negras from across the border 129–119, with shortstop Mircles committing 24 errors in the 3rd inning (and only 30 or 31 for the entire game).

The August 20 Lincoln Star (NE) and August 25 Los Angeles Times (CA) state the Mexican team won 129–119, with one player making 24 errors in the 3rd inning. And the June 18, 1938, Lowell Sun (MA) says San Luista defeated visiting Piedras Legras of Mexico 129–119 in a game beginning at 10:00 A.M. with the losing team making 23 errors in the 3rd inning.

The Mexican town of Piedras Negras (Black Rock) is just across the Rio Grande from Eagle Pass, Texas. San Luisito (not San Luista) is a neighborhood in Eagle Pass. But who won? Was the score 29–19 or 129–119? Did the shortstop make 24 errors, or did the entire team make 23 errors in the 3rd? And more importantly, how could it have taken 10 entire hours to play only 5½ innings? Two Japanese teams managed to play 45 innings in only 8 hours and 19 minutes. We may never know the answer. Some answers will remain forever shrouded in the fog of the past.

Seventy-two (72) years before this game, First Lieutenant Abner Doubleday of the U.S. Army Field Artillery was sent to Eagle Pass at Fort Duncan. He was stationed there in 1854–55. His wife, who was petrified of mice, arranged for a mice-protection net to be built around their bed. Whatever Doubleday may have done for his country in Eagle Pass, Alexander Cartwright was the real inventor of baseball.

Mystery Marathon #2 — 8:30 in Pottsville, PA

Our second “mystery” is how a game between two unnamed Pottsville teams July 8, 1902, could have taken eight and a half hours to play. The final score was 38–36. The local paper relates the game began at 9 A.M., and finished at 5:30 P.M., with no break for dinner.

So OK, it was high scoring. But how could it have taken almost an hour to play each inning? Assuming the game took 9 innings, which we don't know for sure, it would have taken 57 minutes per inning. That is high, but not a record. The Piedras Negras game took 109 minutes per inning.

But that's nothing if we count elapsed time. The Tigers and Yankees struggled through two long rain delays at Yankee Stadium in the first game of a scheduled doubleheader August 9, 1991, and took 5 hours 41 minutes to play just two innings before the umpires finally called it a night at 10:16 P.M. This works out to 170.5 minutes, or almost three hours, per inning! Woops, I almost forgot the critical fact to remember: the Tigers led 1–0 when the game was called off.

Longest Minor League Marathon — 8:25 in Pawtucket, RI

At 4:07 A.M. on Easter morning, April 19, 1981, just 51 minutes before sunrise, 17 freezing and very fortunate souls huddled in the 28-degree pre-dawn chill of Pawtucket, Rhode Island's McCoy Stadium. Their beloved Paw Sox had just failed to break a 2–2 tie with the Rochester Red Wings in the bottom of the 32nd. When the umpires suspended the game, these brave 17 fans looked back on 8 hours 7 minutes of baseball, preceded by a half-hour power failure delay.

The game resumed June 23 with McCoy packed to capacity, and the mercury all the way up to 80. The Paw Sox won 3–2 in the 33rd on Dave Koza's bases-loaded single. The final totals of 8 hours 55 minutes elapsed time and 8 hours 25 minutes game time are modern baseball records.

Longest Japanese Marathon — 8:19 in Mito

When play began September 20, 1983, in the title game of the 38th annual Emperor's Cup Nan-shiki Tournament in Mito, Japan, nobody had the least idea what lay ahead! The game between Light Manufacturing of Tokyo and Tanaka Hospital of Miyazaki began at 8:50 A.M. The local Mito Band was to be ready at 11 A.M. to play at the post-game award ceremony.

The game finally ended at 5:15 P.M. after Light Manufacturing scored in the top of the 45th to win 2–1 after 8 hours 19 minutes of baseball. Including a 6-minute delay in the 26th, the game lasted 8 hours 25 minutes. The Mito Band finally got to play, after waiting for over six hours.

Longest American League Marathon — 8:06 in Comiskey Park

At old Comiskey Park on May 8–9, 1984, the White Sox downed the Brewers 7–6 in 25 innings and 8 hours 6 minutes, the major league record for game time. Suspended after 17 innings at 1:05 A.M. by the AL curfew, the game was won the next evening in the 25th by Harold Baines' homer which just barely cleared the bullpen fence in center.

The White Sox scored two in the 9th, and three in the 21st to keep the game tied, and would have won in the 23rd except that Dave Stegman was ruled out for coach's interference when third base coach Jim Leyland helped him to his feet after Stegman tripped rounding third.

Mystery Marathon #3 — 8:00 in Carrollton, KY

This is our third “mystery” marathon. Ghent defeated Carrollton 179–70 on July 4, 1868. According to Mr. Stonecroft's personal notes from the Carrollton newspaper, the game began at 9 A.M., and was called off in the sixth inning due to darkness at 10 P.M. The time of game was only 8 hours though, because the players and the umpire took a 5-hour break for dinner. However, according to the August 9, 1931, Los Angeles Times, the game began at 10 A.M. and was called due to darkness in the seventh inning at 6 P.M.

Questions are numerous. Why did it take 8 hours to play less than six innings? That's almost an hour and a half per inning. How could they play until 10 P.M. without lights? Why did they take 5 hours to eat dinner? That's almost 15 minutes per bite. Did they use Massachusetts Rules? Why did they score so many runs? And why is the only original source of information on this game Mr. Stonecroft's personal notes from the Carrollton newspaper?

Longest 2-Year College Marathon — 7:30 in Bradenton, FL

On April 4, 1987, at Wynn Field, the Hillsborough Hawks defeated the Manatee Lancers 6–4. The original crowd of 200 had dwindled to just 45 loyal fans when the end came at 9:30 P.M.

Longest National League Marathon — 7:23 in Shea Stadium

In the nightcap of a doubleheader May 31, 1964, the Giants beat the Mets 8–6 in 23 innings as Willie Mays played center field and shortstop for the Giants. 8000 Mets fans from the original crowd of 57,037 stayed until the bitter end at 11:25 P.M.

Longest High School Marathon — 7:20 in Downey, CA

On May 13, 2008, at Yanez Field, it took seven hours and 20 minutes for the Downey HS Vikings to defeat the Harvard-Westlake Upper School Wolverines 3–2 in 20 innings in a high school sectional wildcard game. When it all started at 3:15 P.M., there were 200 fans. When the game ended at 10:35 P.M., only 125 fans were still present. Tommy LaSorda was one of the loyal remaining fans, still there at the very end.

Longest 4-Year College Marathon — 6:45 in Sauget, IL

On February 21, 1999, at Cougar Field in Houston, the Baylor Bears beat the Houston Cougars 8–2 in 22 innings in the longest Division I game ever played — 6 hours 43 minutes. On May 26, 2008, at GCS Ballpark in Sauget, IL, just across the river from St. Louis during Division II playoffs, the Sonoma State Seawolves took two minutes longer to beat the Central Missouri Mules 6–5 in 19 innings in the longest four-year college game ever played — 6 hours 45 minutes.

Longest Minor League Playoff— 6:25 in Nashville, TN

It was 3:50 A.M. when the Omaha Royals finally defeated the hometown Nashville Sounds 8–7 in 20 innings on the evening/morning of September 7/8, 1990, in an American Association playoff game. The crowd of 14,482 shrank to 500 during a long 106-minute rain delay in the bottom of the 11th, and only 300 loyal fans remained until the very end.

Longest American Legion Marathon — 6:06 in Midwest City, OK

In July 1973, Post 170 of Midwest City defeated Post 170 of Choctaw 2–1 in 24 innings at Regional Park. Of the original 50 fans, only 15 remained until the end at 2:06 A.M.

Longest Major League Playoff— 5:50 in Minute Maid Park

Down 6–1 to Atlanta on October 9, 2005, the Astros rallied to win 7–6 with an 8th inning grand slam by Lance Berkman, Brad Ausmus' game-tying homer with two outs in the bottom of the 9th that hit just inches above (maybe) the yellow home run stripe on the left field wall, and Chris Burke's walk-off homer in the bottom of the 18th. The game broke by one minute the old 5:49 record set when the Red Sox and David Ortiz defeated the Yankees 5–4 in 14 innings October 18, 2004.

Longest Doubleheader — 9:52 in Shea Stadium

The longest doubleheader took almost ten hours to play May 31, 1964, as the Giants swept the Mets, 5–3 in the opener and 8–6 in the nightcap in 23 innings. New York's WOR-TV broadcast all 32 innings, in the process attracting the highest number of viewers in the station's history. Elapsed time was 10:20, from 1:05 P.M. to 11:25 P.M., which is not a record. The Phils and Padres split in 12:05 on the evening/morning of July 2/3, 1993, beginning at 4:35 P.M., struggling through three rain delays, and ending at 4:40 A.M.

Longest Tripleheader — 10:20 in Lubbock, TX

On March 6, 2004, Harvard beat Air Force 25–20, before dropping a pair to Texas Tech, 18–6 and 30–8.

Elapsed time was 11:15, from 12:32 P.M. to 11:47 P.M., which is not a record. Georgia Tech's Ramblin' Wreck swept NC, Florida State, and NC State in 11:20 May 25, 2003, in the ACC tournament, beginning at 9:34 A.M. and finishing at 8:54 P.M.

Longest Quadrupleheader — 9:08 in Buffalo, NY

On March 29, 1998, Siena beat Canisius 6–3, and then Canisius swept three games, 9–4, 9–6, and 11–10. All games were scheduled for 7 innings. In the last game, Siena scored 3 in the top of the 7th to take a 4-run lead, but Canisius stormed back with 4 to tie, and won it in the 8th, so the entire day took 29 innings. Elapsed time was 10:08, from 11:54 A.M. to 10:02 P.M., which is also a record.

Longest Elapsed Time Marathon — 15:00 in Lubbock, TX, and Jal, NM

The Hereford High School Whitefaces defeated the Andrews HS Mustangs 9–1 at Hays Field in Lubbock, Texas in the rain-delayed first game of their best-of-three state playoffs series on a Friday night in the middle of May 1986. Knowing that torrential rains would make playing their second game the next day there at 1 P.M. and an “if-necessary” third game at 7 P.M. totally impossible, both teams, along with coaches, fans, and umpires set out at 7 A.M. Saturday morning on what would become a 510-mile long Odyssey from Lubbock to New Mexico in search of a dry field.

Fields were found in Artesia, NM, where they waited two hours, and Hobbs, NM, where they waited two and a half hours, but both fields were too wet, and it was raining in both places. In Hobbs, they ran into two other Texas high school teams, Pecos and Canyon, also in search of a dry field. When told that Eunice, NM had a dry field, a wild race began between the Pecos/Canyon and Hereford/Andrews caravans.

The Pecos/Canyon caravan won the race, and proceeded to begin their second game. Canyon had won their first game the night before, so when Canyon got way ahead early in the second game, Hereford and Andrews decided to wait and play afterwards, since there would be no need for a third game if Canyon won. But Pecos staged a big comeback to win, forcing a deciding third game, leaving Hereford and Andrews still looking for a dry field.

Then they heard there was an old field in Jal, NM that hadn't been used in two years, so off they went. Flickering light standards were fixed by taping two wires together with black electrical tape. The outfield had knee-high weeds, but that was no problem; the state playoffs had to be decided! Foul lines were chalked using an old shoe box.

Finally, after a 12-hour long change-of-field delay, they began their game, scheduled for 1 P.M. in Lubbock, Texas, at 12:00 Midnight New Mexico time, 1:00 A.M. Texas time. Having won the night before in Lubbock, Hereford wrapped up the series with a 4–3 win over Andrews. But naturally, the game went into extra innings! The scheduled 7-inning game lasted exactly three hours, and went 8 innings. Fifty fans, including Hereford mascot “Red,” stayed awake until the very end, which came at exactly 3:00 A.M. New Mexico time; 4:00 A.M. Texas time. And then everyone drove back home to Texas!

I. HIGHLIGHTS AND ANALYSIS

4:40 A.M. and Rain

The current major league baseball latest finish record, 4:40 A.M., was set on the evening of July 2, 1993, at Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia. The Padres were in town for a two-night doubleheader against the Phillies, and the threat of rain did not deter a sellout crowd of 54,617 from attending, attracted in part by a Fourth of July fireworks show when the games were done. However, there were three rain delays in the first game, 70 minutes at the start, two hours 34 minutes in the bottom of the 4th, and two hours 48 minutes in the top of the 6th, for a total of 6 hours 32 minutes of rain delays. At Midnight, when the last SEPTA commuter train left the Stadium, there were only 10,000 fans left, and when the Padres finally won the opener 5–2 at 1:03 A.M., there were only 6000 fans left. When it was announced the fireworks show was going to be postponed, the crowd dwindled to 3000 before the second game began at 1:28 A.M. But when the bars closed at 2 A.M., and people heard the Phils were still playing, the crowd built back up to 3500 at 2:30 A.M. and 4000 at 4:40 A.M., when the Phillies finally won 6–5 in the bottom of the tenth on relief pitcher Mitch Williams' single.

3:55 A.M. and Rain

The previous major league baseball lateness record, 3:55 A.M. (precisely 3:44:45 A.M.), was set eight years earlier, on the evening of July 4, 1985, at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. In a twice rain-delayed 19-inning thriller, the New York Mets outlasted the Atlanta Braves 16–13. The Braves twice tied the game on home runs while only one perilous strike away from defeat.

In one of the absolutely weirdest moments in baseball's entire history, Braves pitcher Rick Camp, batting .060 lifetime with 0 career home runs, and hitting only because the Braves had no pinch-hitters left, crushed an 0–2 forkball for a homer to left over a drawn-in outfield to tie the game at 11–11 with two outs in the bottom of the 18th, thus enabling the game to break the previous major league lateness record of 3:23 A.M. set by the Expos and Phillies in Philadelphia on August 10, 1977. Terry Harper had earlier lined a two-run, two-out, two-strike homer off the left field foul pole to tie the score at 10–10 in the 13th. When Camp, again representing the tying run in the 19th with 2 runners aboard, finally struck out to end the game at 3:55 A.M., a new major league record for elapsed time of 8 hours 15 minutes had also been set, including 6 hours 10 minutes of baseball action and 2 hours 5 minutes of rain delays.

The remaining 8000 fans of an original crowd of 44,947 then settled back for the rainy evening's finale, the 4th (5th?) of July fireworks extravaganza which lit up the "Night the Lights Didn't Go Out in Georgia" from 4:01 A.M. to 4:12 A.M. The fireworks show was faithfully carried live back to New York by the Mets WOR-TV broadcast team, which included Tim McCarver, whose lack of lightning speed at 3:15 A.M. on the evening of September 26, 1975, had allowed Mets right fielder Rusty Staub to throw him out at the plate, thus ending another game that was threatening to go until dawn.

Now, ten years older and wiser and grayer, Staub was still winning post–3 A.M. marathons. He was intentionally walked as a pinch-hitter for winning pitcher Tom Gorman, and later scored during the Mets 5-run winning rally in the top of the 19th. Besides McCarver and Staub, the other marathon veteran present in Atlanta was Braves coach Bobby Wine, who had been a Phillies coach at the 3:23 A.M. Expos-Phils game.

Although they won the game, the Mets lost the two major arguments of the evening. Mets manager Davey Johnson officially protested the game after a rain delay in the third because he was not permitted to change his batting order after replacing Dwight Gooden with a relief pitcher, and was later ejected with Darryl Strawberry in the 17th after an unpleasant discussion with plate umpire Terry Tata concerning the size of post–3 A.M. strike zones.

4:09 A.M. on Easter Morning

At 4:09 A.M. on Easter morning, April 19, 1981, just 51 minutes before sunrise, 17 freezing and very fortunate souls huddled in the 28 degree pre-dawn chill of Pawtucket, Rhode Island's McCoy Stadium, having watched their beloved Paw Sox fail to break a 2-2 tie against the Rochester Red Wings in the bottom of the 32nd. After the umpires suspended the game, these 17 brave fans could look back on 8 hours 7 minutes of baseball, preceded by a 32-minute power failure delay, and claim to have witnessed the latest local time conclusion ever to a professional baseball game. At that time, the 4:09 A.M. ending exceeded the previous minor league and major league records by 100 and 14 minutes respectively.

When the game resumed two months later on June 23, the mercury had risen to 80 degrees, and McCoy was packed to capacity as the Paw Sox won 3-2 in the 33rd inning on Dave Koz's bases-loaded single. The final totals, 33 innings, 8 hours 25 minutes game time, and 8 hours 57 minutes elapsed time, are still all-time professional baseball records. Momentoes of this historic game are now buried in a time capsule beneath the field, where they join the five-ton truck that in 1942 sank without a trace into the swampy outfield while McCoy was being built by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's Works Progress Administration (WPA).

Strange Baseball Events After 1 A.M.

Detailed research into late-ending games has revealed that at least 498 baseball games have ended after 1 A.M., including 186 major league games. The most frequent cause is extra innings. Other frequent causes include rain, the Alaskan Midnight Sun, fog, automatic tarpaulin malfunction, scoreboard fire, blinding sunlight, power failure, need for a stretcher, and an automatic sprinkler system which could not be turned off.

Strange things can occur when games venture beyond 1 A.M. One such event led indirectly to the 1978 AL East playoff between the Red Sox and Yankees. In the 17th inning of a rain-delayed 1:16 A.M. contest on August 3 at Yankee Stadium, Dwight Evans' long fly ball into the right field corner curved foul and landed in the seats, eluding Reggie Jackson's grasp. Jackson was only halfway back to his normal playing position when Yankee pitcher Ken Clay inexplicably delivered the next pitch. Evans lined a single to right that would have been caught had Clay waited until Jackson was in position. The hit led to two runs and a 7-5 Red Sox victory, without which Bucky Dent might never have broken millions of hearts in New England with one momentous bloop over the Green Monster.

Critical early morning mistakes twice cost victory in the last inning of 1:15 A.M. games which ended as ties due to curfew in 1961. On June 8, after his 11th-inning triple at Fenway tied the score, Gary Geiger failed to score later on what should have been Carl Yastrzemski's game-winning sacrifice fly. Geiger, thinking his triple had just won the game, jubilantly dashed into the dugout where, rather than being mobbed by his teammates, he was tagged out by the Angels. Just 20 days later, after a routine pitch with 2 outs in the 15th inning at Connie Mack Stadium, Giant catcher Hobie Landrith's return throw to his pitcher sailed into center, allowing Tony Gonzalez to scamper home from third with the tying run for the Phils. The batter promptly grounded out to end the tie game.

1:06 A.M. and the Sprinklers

Perhaps the most bizarre ending to a post-1 A.M. game occurred August 23, 1984, at Centennial Field in Burlington, Vermont. Trailing the Albany A's 9-6 going into the bottom of the 17th, the Vermont Reds came to the plate needing three to tie. At 12:51 A.M., with a 1-0 count on Vermont leadoff batter Ron Little, an automatic timer turned on the six outfield sprinklers, one of which was located right between Albany center fielder David Wilder's two feet. After a 15-minute laughter delay, during which man's best efforts to turn off the mechanical beast proved unsuccessful, the game was suspended at 1:06 A.M. The next evening, Vermont managed to eke out only one run, and Albany won 9-7. After much deliberation, the University of Vermont, which owns the ballpark, has decided to tempt fate; the sprinkler system's automatic timer has not been adjusted.

Records Come, and Records Go

Ever since night baseball began, the latest ending record has been getting progressively later, despite the fact that starting times have become earlier. Typical starting times have regressed from 9 P.M. in the 1930s to 8:30 P.M. in the 1940s to 8 P.M. in the 1960s to 7:35 P.M. in the 1980s to 7:05 P.M. in the 2000s.

The very first known post-1 A.M. major league game took place June 15, 1945, at Griffith Stadium in Washington. In the nightcap of a long 27-inning two-night doubleheader, Nats' hurler Johnny Niggeling went the distance as the Red Sox and Senators struggled to a 13-inning 4-4 tie at 1:02 A.M. after Boston had won the opening game 6-5 in 14 innings.

The next known post-1 A.M. major league game was literally carried into the wee hours on a stretcher. With two out in the bottom of the 9th on July 8, 1949, at Shibe Park, Phils second sacker Granny Hamner doubled to center scoring Richie Ashburn to knot the contest at 1-all. After both teams scored twice in the 11th, Boston shortstop Alvin Dark was knocked unconscious while running the bases by a ball thrown by Hamner in the 13th. Dark was carried off the field on a stretcher and taken to Temple University Hospital where he was listed in satisfactory condition. Del Crandall's 16th-inning sacrifice fly to center off Schoolboy Rowe later gave the Braves a 4-3 victory at 1:01 A.M.

Two years later, on June 22, 1951, the Dodgers-Pirates

8:30 P.M. start was delayed 2 hours 14 minutes when power failure knocked out Forbes Field's four outfield light towers. Further delayed by rain for 36 minutes in the 6th, the proceedings did not conclude until 1:56 A.M., as 10,000 of the original crowd of 24,966 stuck around to witness the tired Dodgers walk off with an 8-4 victory, keyed by Jackie Robinson's home run into the Greenburg Gardens Short Porch in left.

The 1:56 A.M. mark lasted a little over 12 years; the scene was again Forbes Field. On August 9, 1963, after rain delayed start of the twi-night doubleheader for 60 minutes, the Houston Colt .45's struggled to a 15-inning 7-6 win in the opener. By the time Roberto Clemente lined a bases-loaded single in the 11th to enable the Bucs to claim the nightcap by an identical score, only 300 of the original 9420 fans remained, and the large Longines clock atop the scoreboard in left read 2:30 A.M. One of those remaining 300 fans, who sat throughout the long rainy evening in the left field bleachers with his father, was later inspired to write this book.

All Day and Night

On May 31, 1964, at Shea, the Mets and Giants struggled mightily to break the latest finish record, but could not overcome the handicap of an early afternoon start, as San Francisco took both ends of a twinbill, winning the nightcap 8-6 in 23 innings. Del Crandall, still going strong 15 years after having won that 1:01 A.M. game back in 1949, hit the game-winning RBI in the 23rd inning, scoring Jim Davenport from third. Joe Christopher of the Mets tied the game 6-6 in the 7th with a 3-run homer that bounced off Willie Mays' glove and over the 8-foot fence in right center. The game time of the second game was 7 hours 23 minutes. Including the intermission between games, the twinbill lasted 10 hours 17 minutes. Only 8000 of the sellout crowd of 57,037 stuck around for the bitter end at 11:25 P.M.

Because the National League twi-nighter curfew was no longer in effect in 1964, had this been a 6 P.M. twi-nighter rather than a 1 P.M. daylight doubleheader, an all-time professional record would have been set at that time, since the end would have come at 4:25 A.M. rather than 11:25 P.M. A new mark for latest ending day games was however set, one which prevailed until June 17, 1967, when the current day game record was set at a Tigers-A's doubleheader in Detroit. It lasted from 2:15 P.M. to 12:17 A.M. There was a rain delay, and the second game went 19 innings, as the original crowd of 14,871 dwindled to just 200 fans at the end, including Commissioner William Eckert.

"More! More!"

On June 14, 1966, a minor league lateness record was set at Al Lang Field in St. Petersburg, Florida.

Managed by later Tiger skipper Sparky Anderson, the host St. Pete Cards lost a 4-3 squeaker to Miami Marlins in 29 innings as the clock struck 2:29 A.M. A 2 A.M. announcement by umpires and managers that the game would not continue beyond the 30th inning had been met with jeers and cries of "More! More!" from the 150 night owls who remained from the original crowd of 740. This minor league record would stand for 15 years until broken at Pawtucket in 1981.

Japan Rhubarbs

During World War II, games in Japan were all played during daylight. On May 24, 1942, Taiyo and Nagoya of the Japanese Professional Federation struggled to a 4-4 tie in Korakuen Stadium, Tokyo, ending at 6:27 P.M. Because of early evening starting times, normally 6 P.M., and frequent rulings that no game can go beyond 10 P.M. so that fans can catch the last subway train home, no game in Japan has yet ever gone past 1 A.M.

A Japanese record finish was set in a Central League twi-nighter between the Yomiuri Giants and the Kokutetsu Swallows September 7, 1961, again at Tokyo's Korakuen Stadium. Although Japanese baseball is noted for its lack of disputes between players and umpires, in the top of the 11th inning of the second game, a furious argument raged for 1 hour 52 minutes, the longest known rhubarb in baseball history. The argument focused on whether or not Giant third baseman Nagashima was guilty of fielder's interference on Swallows baserunner Tsuchiya in a rundown play between third base and home plate. Tsuchiya was finally ruled safe at the plate, with what proved to be the winning run in a 3-2 Swallow victory, ending at 12:11 A.M.

The current Japanese latest finish record stands at 12:26 A.M. It happened at Koshien Stadium in Osaka on September 11, 1992. The Yakult Swallows and the hometown Hanshin Tigers played to a 15-inning tie in five hours 49 minutes, with a 37-minute long rhubarb thrown in for good measure.

D.C. Curfew

The Forbes Field 2:30 A.M. major league mark was broken June 12, 1967, as Washington downed the White Sox 6 to 5 on Paul Casanova's bases-loaded single in the 22nd. Only 1500 of the original 7236 fans remained in D.C. Stadium until the end at 2:44 A.M., which still stands as the AL lateness record. Since this was a weeknight game, D.C.'s Saturday evening curfew was not applicable. There is considerable confusion concerning the exact time of this former Saturday night curfew back in the Senators era. According to then Owner Calvin R. Griffith, the curfew required both teams to be off the field by 2:00 A.M.

But according to Edward L. Curry, then Assistant

Corporation Counsel for the District of Columbia, the statute involved is Title 19 D.C. Municipal Regulations Section 1302.1, and since 1933 it has listed the official curfew as 3:00 A.M. Regardless of whether it is 2 A.M. or 3 A.M., this D.C. regulation was baseball's latest curfew ever, and maintains to this day its unique distinction as the only curfew which was never enforced. The latest that the current National League Nationals have played in the nation's capital city is 2:07 A.M., downing the Phils 3–1 September 28, 2006, after a four-hour 27-minute rain delay before the game started.

Earliest Start

Way back in the late 1930s, the record for the earliest starting game had been set in a Negro National League game between the Homestead Grays and the Pittsburgh Crawfords at Gus Greenlee Field in Pittsburgh's Hill District. A Pennsylvania state law prevented Sunday games from continuing past 6:59 P.M. Angered that this "Blue Law" prevented him from scheduling profitable Sunday evening games, Crawfords owner Gus Greenlee scheduled a Monday morning game to begin at one minutes after the stroke of Midnight. Unfortunately, as is the case with all other Negro League contests, we have no record of the ending time.

2:29 A.M. and Fog

At San Diego Stadium on September 24, 1971, after dropping the lidlifter of a twi-nighter to Houston in 21 innings, the Padres took the field for the nightcap just a little too late, and the teams had to settle for tying the Grays–Craws 12:01 A.M. earliest-start record as the 12:00 midnight early start barrier remained secure by 60 seconds. The morning was not without further excitement, however. Tied in the bottom of the 9th, with one aboard, San Diego's Nate Colbert lifted a high fly ball right to Astro center fielder Cesar Cedenio, who lost the ball in a fog bank. With two men on, the Padres and their remaining 100 fans now stood poised for victory, but play was halted at 2:15 A.M. After a 14-minute fog delay, during which it became apparent the swirling soupy fog enveloping Mission Valley was not about to lift anytime soon, play was illogically resumed. On the first pitch, Ollie Brown promptly brought an end to the evening's festivities at 2:29 A.M. with an RBI single to right. Astros right fielder Jim Wynn not only couldn't see the ball, but he had trouble even seeing his own infielders.

Radio listeners in Houston couldn't believe their ears, but could take solace in the fact that they had just broken the 4:15 A.M. all-time record for latest local time radio broadcast endings, since it was then 4:29 A.M. back in Texas. The current broadcast record of 4:45 A.M. was set by New York listeners who tuned in to the Mets 19-inning 7–3 victory in Dodger Stadium May 24, 1973. This is the only sunrise service in baseball history. Mets radio broadcast listeners near a window watched dawn break in New York City at 4:31 A.M., 14 minutes before the game ended in Los Angeles at 1:45 A.M.

The 3 A.M. Barrier

The 3 A.M. barrier for professional baseball was finally smashed September 11, 1974, at Shea. Ken Reitz's 2-run homer for St. Louis, with 2 outs in the 9th, tied up the Mets at 3–3. Then the pitchers took total control for 15 innings. Only a hardy thousand of the original crowd of 13,460 remained to see Bake McBride score all the way from 1st base in the 25th when Mets pitcher Hank Webb's pickoff throw to 1st was wild, and the relay to the plate from the outfield was dropped by catcher Ron Hodges to give the Cards a 4–3 win. As home plate umpire Ed Sudol ruled the sliding McBride safe at the plate, he couldn't help remembering that he had also been behind the plate during the two other Mets marathon losses: 23 innings to the Giants in 1964 and 24 innings to the Astros in 1968. At the end, after 7 hours 4 minutes of baseball, the huge right center field scoreboard read 3:13 A.M. Amazingly, the 1st base umpire had called a balk on the wild pickoff. Under a rule that had been revoked just several years earlier, McBride would have been required to return to 2nd. He might never have scored, and the game might never have ended.

A year later, the Mets again collaborated to push back the lateness barrier. On September 26, 1975, in the first of what would be three rainy post–3 A.M. baseball evenings in six years in Philadelphia's Veterans Stadium, the Mets and Phils traded 12-inning wins. In the nightcap, the third rain delay of the evening halted play for 77 minutes in the third. In the bottom of the 12th, Tim McCarver was thrown out at the plate, Rusty Staub to Felix Millan to Jerry Grote, giving the Mets a 3–2 win at 3:15 A.M. History records neither McCarver's fleetness of foot at that late hour, nor how many of the 200 remaining fans were awake.

The Vet seemed to love early morning marathons. Of seven documented major league post–3 A.M. games, four were at the Vet. The Vet hosted 12 post–1 A.M. games, but that only gives it second place for the most by a ballpark. Fenway Park has hosted 14 such games. Philadelphia does hold the record for most such games for a city, though: 19, with four at Shibe Park and three at Citizens Bank Park in addition to the Vet's twelve.

Beginning in 1914, beautiful Wrigley Field's Friendly Confines in Chicago faithfully served the Federal League Whales and National League Cubs for 91½ years without a post–1 A.M. game. Its first and only such game arrived July 26, 2005, when a long rain delay and 11 innings carried the Giants and Cubs to a 1:16 A.M. finish. The minor league record for longest time with no post–1 A.M. game is held by Birming-ham's Rickwood Field, the minor leagues' oldest and most pleasant ballpark, and still used by the Birmingham Barons once every summer. Rickwood opened in 1910, and has never seen a post-1 A.M. game.

The Phils and Expos set a new record August 10, 1977. Again there was rain at the Vet, as the start of the opener was delayed 63 minutes when the heavens opened up during the playing of "O Canada." In the third, a second rain delay lasted 2 hours 27 minutes, during which the tarpaulin was unrolled and rolled up again four times as the rain played games with the grounds crew. Beginning at 8:42 P.M., hundreds of kids played "slide" on the wet tarp. The nightcap began at 11:50 P.M. with only a third of the original crowd of 46,664 still present, and was halted in the second for 1 hour 26 minutes by the evening's third rain delay. As rain continued to delay activities in the Vet at 12:26 A.M., Pennsylvania's early-ending game of the evening was just ending across the state in Three Rivers Stadium as Pirate fans celebrated an 18-inning 2-1 victory over the Cubs. Back in Philadelphia, the rain finally stopped and the Phils eventually won both games by identical scores of 6-1. Five thousand fans remained until the very end at 3:23 A.M. Propelled by three rain delays totaling 4 hours 56 minutes, this remained the major league lateness record for eight years.

But it had to withstand another rainy early morning challenge at the Vet. On June 9, 1980, Steve Carlton was hurling a no-hitter against San Francisco as the Phils went to bat in the fourth. Two separate rain delays, totaling 5 hours 0 minutes, occurred in the bottom of the 4th. The second of the two delays lasted 3 hours 32 minutes, the fourteenth-longest known major league rain delay ever; the longest was when the White Sox and Rangers waited 7 hours 23 minutes for rain to stop August 12, 1990.

As Carlton threw the first pitch of the top of the 5th, 5 hours 9 minutes had elapsed since his last pitch of the top of the 4th, and he set the all-time record for time between pitches for a pitcher in one game. With only 200 of the original 28,702 fans still on hand, the Giants emerged victorious 3 to 1 after a record 9-inning elapsed time of 7 hours 26 minutes at 3:11 A.M., only 12 minutes shy of the 3:23 A.M. lateness record, and just 41 minutes after the Reds and Padres had battled to a 6-6 tie the same evening at Riverfront in a game finally called off at 2:30 A.M. in the bottom of the 11th after the last of four rain delays. The Phils took their marathon act to Montreal later in the season, clinching the National League East pennant on the next-to-the-last day of the 1980 season with an 11-inning 6-4 victory over the Expos that lasted 7 hours 46 minutes due to a 45-minute network television scheduling delay and a 3-hour 10-minute rain delay.

At Comiskey Park on May 8 and 9, 1984, the White Sox defeated the Brewers 7-6 in 25 innings and 8 hours 6 minutes, a new major league record for game time. Suspended at 1:05 A.M. by the AL curfew after 17 innings, the game was decided the next evening in the 25th by Harold Baines' homer, which just cleared the center field bullpen fence. The White Sox scored twice in the 9th and three times in the 21st to keep the game tied, and would have won in the 23rd except that Dave Stegman was ruled out for coach's interference when third base coach Jim Leyland helped Stegman to his feet after he tripped rounding third.

This game is rich in "might-have-beens": Had it been played during either of the two periods between 1910-1948 or 1976-1980, when Comiskey Park had no inner fence in center field, Baines' drive would have been easily caught, and the two teams might have broken the major league record for innings, set way back on May 1, 1920, at Braves Field when the Dodgers and Braves battled to a 1-1 tie in 26 innings. But best of all, if the game had been the nightcap of that foggy Astros-Padres twi-nighter back in 1971 which began at 12:01 A.M., it would have finished at 8:07 A.M., and the last few innings could have been covered live by Bryant Gumbel and Jane Pauley on NBC's "Today" show.

Confusion in Claremore, OK: 3 A.M. or 4 A.M. ?

On July 23, 1962, an American Legion tournament game at Legion Field in Claremore, Oklahoma, set an amateur record by lasting until 3:00 A.M., but an unusual combination of daylight savings confusion and newspaper error combined to make it appear as if the game had ended at 4:00 A.M. The scheduled 8:00 P.M. start of the Bartlesville Philnines-Claremore Merchants game was delayed until 11:30 P.M. by previous tournament games. According to the July 24, 1962, edition of the Bartlesville Examiner-Enterprise, the Philnines' 11-inning 8-6 victory "was completed at 4 A.M. CST Tuesday." The article was headlined "Philnines Stay Awake; Beat Claremore at 4."

But according to Durand Lugar of Tulsa, the official scorer of the game, "For some wild and crazy reason, Bartlesville went on daylight savings time for the summer of 1962, the only town in Oklahoma to do so; it sure was confusing." Daylight time being an hour later, Merle Bird, the Bartlesville sportswriter, felt the game ended at 4 A.M. because his watch was set to Bartlesville daylight time. But that would have been 4 A.M. CDT; when the paper said 4 A.M. CST, it was wrong. Claremore time was 3 A.M. CST, and since Claremore was the venue of the game, 3 A.M. was the official ending time of the game.

4:30 A.M. in Bartlesville, OK

Another amateur record was set in Oklahoma, this time on July 4, 1976, in Bartlesville, during the 17th annual American Legion Glen Winger Memorial Tournament. Two straight days of rainouts forced scheduling of eight 7-inning games in one day. Bartlesville's

Bill Doenges Ford Injuns downed Oklahoma City Grant-SE 5-0 in a game which began at 2:40 A.M. and did not conclude until 4:30 A.M. A capacity crowd of 1500 fans remained until the very end as they observed the nation's 200th birthday.

2:08 A.M., the Midnight Sun, and Snatching Victory from the Jaws of Defeat

Another unusual post-1 A.M. amateur contest took place June 21, 1984, in Fairbanks, Alaska during the 79th annual Midnight Sun Game. This game begins each year around 11 P.M. to commemorate the June Summer Solstice, the longest day of the year. It involves a different opponent selected each year for the host Fairbanks club, and features the emotional singing of the Alaska Flag Song during the first change of sides after Midnight. Trailing 2-1 in the eighth inning, the host Alaska Goldpanners of Fairbanks snatched victory from the jaws of defeat with a 9-0 forfeit win over the Chinese Taipei Olympic Team of Taiwan at 2:08 A.M. when Taiwan refused to send a batter to the plate.

Early in the game, with clouds hiding the sun, and hordes of mosquitoes invading the diamond from the banks of the nearby Chena River, Growden Memorial Park had been shrouded in bug spray mist and relative darkness, but the traditions of the Midnight Sun Game do not allow lights to be used. The umpires told the visitors' manager that if they would just continue playing, the game would be called after 7 innings if it was still somewhat dark. The Chinese, who later that Summer won the Bronze Medal at the Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles, scored twice in the 7th to take a 2-1 lead. But they adamantly refused to bat in the 8th, even when ordered to do so by the umpires, who pointed out that the clouds had moved and the Midnight Sun was now shining. And thus, the Goldpanners snatched a 9-0 forfeit win from the jaws of a 2-1 defeat.

Amateur tournaments frequently end up going long into the night when delays squeeze the schedule. The latest that any such tournament has ever ended was at Tempe Diablo Stadium, in Tempe, Arizona, when games scheduled for November 4, 2000, in the Men's Senior League Tournament experienced long rain delays. Tournament games continued throughout the night, and the final game ended at 9:05 A.M. with the Kansas City Monarchs defeating the San Jose All-Stars 2-1 in the Age 38 and Older Championship Game, which had begun at 6:30 A.M.

510-mile long Odyssey from Lubbock, Texas to New Mexico in search of a dry field, fields were found in Artesia (2:00 wait) and Hobbs (2:30 wait) but the fields were too wet and it was raining in both places, in Hobbs they ran into two other Texas high schools, Pecos and Canyon, who were also in search of a dry field, when told that Eunice had a dry field the race was on between the Pecos/Canyon caravan and the Hereford/Andrews caravan, Pecos and Canyon won the race, and proceeded to begin their second game, Canyon had won their first game the night before so when Canyon got way ahead early in the second game, Hereford and Andrews decided to wait and play afterwards since there would be no need for a third game if Canyon won, but Pecos staged a big comeback to win, forcing a deciding third game, leaving Hereford and Andrews still looking for a dry field, and then they heard there was an old field in Jal that had not been used in two years, flickering light standards were fixed by taping two wires together with black electrical tape, outfield had knee-high weeds, foul lines were chalked using an old shoe box, finally after a 12-hour long change-of-field delay, they began play at 12:00 Midnight New Mexico time, 1:00 A.M. 3:00 A.M. New Mexico time; 4:00 A.M. Texas time — Hays Field, Lubbock, Texas; Ferguson Field, Jal, New Mexico — 5/1/1986 — 4A best two-out-of-three playoffs — knowing that torrential rains made playing second game at 1 P.M. and “if-necessary” third game at 7 P.M. totally impossible, both teams along with coaches, fans, and umpires set out at 7 A.M. on what ended up being a 510-mile long Odyssey from Lubbock, Texas to New Mexico in search of a dry field, fields were found in Artesia (2:00 wait) and Hobbs (2:30 wait) but the fields were too wet and it was raining in both places, in Hobbs they ran into two other Texas high schools, Pecos and Canyon, who were also in search of a dry field, when told that Eunice had a dry field the race was on between the Pecos/Canyon caravan and the Hereford/Andrews caravan, Pecos and Canyon won the race, and proceeded to begin their second game, Canyon had won their first game the night before so when Canyon got way ahead early in the second game, Hereford and Andrews decided to wait and play afterwards since there would be no need for a third game if Canyon won, but Pecos staged a big comeback to win, forcing a deciding third game, leaving Hereford and Andrews still looking for a dry field, and then they heard there was an old field in Jal that had not been used in two years, flickering light standards were fixed by taping two wires together with black electrical tape, outfield had knee-high weeds, foul lines were chalked using an old shoe box, finally after a 12-hour long change-of-field delay, they began play at 12:00 Midnight New Mexico time, 1:00 A.M. Texas time, Hereford High School Whitefaces 4 Andrews High School Mustangs 3 in 3:00 and 8 innings — 50 fans including Hereford mascot Red.

Epilogue

Ed Sudol's Over 300,000 Innings and Four Decades at Shea

Of course, had Hank Webb's pickoff not been wild, or had Ron Hodges not dropped the ball, or had Ed Sudol ruled the sliding Bake McBride out at the plate, or even better, had the rules on simultaneous balks and wild pickoff throws not been changed recently and Bake McBride had been required to return to second in the top of the 25th at Shea on September 11, 1974, the Cards and Mets might still be playing! With nine hours of rest daily, five months off for winter, and three hours per nine innings, or 45 innings daily and 9,450 innings annually, they would now be in the fourth decade and well over 300,000 innings in that game. And every seven innings, the fans would still be stretching and singing:

Take me out to the ball game,
Take me out with the crowd,
Buy me some peanuts and Cracker Jack,
I don't care if I NEVER get back.
